Death in Oglala caused by high winds

OGLALA - On Tuesday night, between 8-8:30 p.m., 50-70 mph winds hit Oglala blowing over a trailer house eleven miles west of Oglala. Faron Yellow Horse, 23, was found dead at the scene as the trailer home blew over and was turned into a pile of debris by the wind.

Yellow Horse's aunt suffered a broken leg and four children in the trailer home received minor bumps and bruises. High winds were forecast throughout the week across southwestern South Dakota and on Monday night, the weather station in Pine Ridge registered a gust of 55 mph at 8:52 p.m.

Relatives on the way to the casino noticed the trailer was not where it was supposed to be and turned around, finding the children and adults spread over the prairie by the high winds.

"We offer our condolences to the family of this young man," said Lyle Jack during the council meeting Tuesday morning, "and this underlines the need we have on having a tribal emergency management team here on Pine Ridge Reservation."

Housing homeowners to get titles/deeds

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing will be issuing titles and deeds to 28 homeowners who have paid for their houses.

The conveying of titles will occur at 11 a.m. on April 28 at the SueAnne Boys and Girls Club.

RST hears Rosebud Hospital CEO report

'State of Medical Emergency' declared

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Shelly Harris, CEO of the Rosebud Comprehensive Health Care facility delivered a regular progress report on Wednesday, April 12 to the RST tribal council while the legislative body passed a resolution declaring a "State of Medical Emergency" on the Rosebud Sioux reservation. The motion was made by RST council representative Marion Young-One Star and seconded by Antelope council representative Robert Moore and passed by a vote of 16 in agreement and zero opposed with three representatives not voting.

Presumably, the medical state of emergency is a way to signal the need for additional funding from the Indian Health Service and document the current state of affairs at the service unit. The hospital administration has shown a strong propensity to collect third party resources as witnessed by the visually attractive graphics contained in the report.

Assisting customers in applying for Medicare A, Medicare Part B, Medicaid and private insurance is an important function of the hospital and the number assisted increased from March 2005 to 2006 by approximately 3,411 customers when you add up the numbers and that indicates positive growth and forward progress.

The actual numbers of customers who utilized the facility for health care increased from the first quarter of fiscal year 2005 to the first quarter

State legislative candidates could change, voter turnout urged

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Voters in legislative districts 26, 26A and 27 will see the effect of the redistricting as ordered by Judge Karen Schrier last year. District 27 includes Bennett, Jackson, Haakon and Shannon counties. District 26 includes Todd, Mellette, Tripp, and Gregory counties,while District 26 includes Mellette and Tripp counties.

According to the ACLU website the purpose of the redistricting amounted to "Redrawing of legislative district lines to ensure there is no discrimination against Native American voters in 13 of the 66 counties."

O.J. Semans is a facilitator and activist of sorts when it comes to national, local and tribal elections. He professes a strong desire to inform Lakota people of the political issues, which are confronting them. He does not much care how people vote; he simply wants them to know that it is at the polling place where people can exercise their constitutional right and control their own destiny.

Jim Bradford (D-PR) and Theresa Two Bulls(D-PR) incumbents are being challenged in the upcoming elections by two Republicans from District 27.

A couple of years ago, Semans and his wife Barb were very active in registering Lakota people for the national election while utilizing the media to delineate the issues point by point which were of interest to tribal people.

In recent weeks, he has also conducted a voter registration drive on the campus of SGU. He noted that he has had an opportunity to visit with students as to their understanding of the issues, which will arise during upcoming elections and has gotten as sense of their awareness. KINI radio station manager Richard Iyotte also interviewed him on his voter registration efforts recently.

Semans provided an update on the slate of candidates and Lakota candidates who will be vying for the state house and senate. Representing District 26, which is comprised of Todd, Mellette, Tripp, and Gregory counties, will be Democrats Julie Bartling, John Simpson, and RST tribal member Sherman Wright. The winner of this contest will go up against incumbent Republic John Koskan of Wood on June 6.

Current voter registration figures and candidates can be accessed at www.sdsos.gov.

In the race for the District 26A house seat, which includes Todd and Mellette counties, RST tribal member Democrat Paul Joseph will go against Todd County Middle School teacher Larry Lucas and the winner of that race will go up against Republican, Berry Jensen.

Cheyenne River Sioux tribal member Democrat Steve Emery of McLaughlin is running for a state seat from District 28 according to the state's website. OST tribal member Senator Jim Bradford (D-PR) will be facing Democrat Gene S. Williams and OST tribal member Theresa Two Bulls (D-PR) will be challenged by Republican Craig L. Hanrahan of

OST council votes to contract bureau investigative division

'Eviction policy' goes down in election year defeat

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

MANDERSON - On Thursday, the final day of a three day regular tribal council meeting at the Wounded Knee District School in Manderson, the council voted 15-1 to contract the criminal investigation division from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

"This starts the process," said Garfield Steele, council representative from Wounded Knee District and chairman of the judiciary committee, "we will sit down with the BIA and see what we need to do to get the contracting done - it was evident by both the vote and the discussion that everyone was in favor of putting the CI division back under the tribe."

Council representatives expressed concern about the time it takes to investigate cases, that the bureau is not responsive to the community and the tribe and that the community would be better served with the CI division back under the tribe.

"The tribe will need to present a contract proposal to Norman Ford, self determination specialist with the Bureau," said Martin Hansford, supervisory special agent with the Bureau's criminal investigation division, "the BIA would have 90 days to respond and would probably ask for a 90 day extension to evaluate the proposal - there are four or five specific points that will guide our review including funding, equipment and quality of service."

Up until the spring of 2000, the CI division was under the tribe. An evaluation by the BIA in 1996 found a lack of supervision, poor reports, many failures to investigate and financial and property mismanagement; another evaluation in late 99 and early 2000 had the same findings and a Western Regional Institute for Community Policing report at the same time mirrored the two BIA evaluations. The tribal council voted to retrocede the CI division back to the Bureau in the spring of 2000.

"The goal of the federal government has been to help prepare tribes to be self sufficient to take over these programs," added Hansford, "and the majority of the contract proposals made by tribes are honored but I feel strongly that BIA law enforcement needs to start considering the needs and best interests of the community, what is right and best for the community and would be the best for our citizens whether they are under the Bureau or the tribe."

Stating that he was very happy with the job being done by the current chief of police, Ron Duke, Steele made a motion to rescind an earlier council resolution to advertise the chief of police's position; the motion died for the lack of a second. With a vote of 12-4, the council voted to change the requirement for associate judges for tribal court from requiring of 2006 by 2,781 customers according the to report on page 6.

By the same token, the all important third party collections appears to have been a strength of the current administration as it has instituted new billing and processing procedures and additional personnel in order to cut into the significant indebtedness as incurred by past management. That indebtedness is a fact that is well documented by a previous RST tribal resolution, which called for an investigation by the Inspector General and initiated by Antelope Council representative Robert Moore during a previous council meeting.

The report does not detail the current budget deficit of the hospital, however it is likely that that figure has been reduced in a significant way when considering the refinement of third party collections action which was instituted shortly after the new management was installed.

In the contract health services section, the number of motor vehicle accidents as described has been somewhat disturbing and points to the immediate need for intervention that will lead to increased seat belt use. The number of accidents for the first quarter was listed at 87 and in examining other quarters it appears that accidents are commonplace. The report notes that the money that is spent on needless automobile accidents could be used for other medical care and treatment referrals.

The management has been diligent in getting word out to the tribal membership in explaining what is considered 'priority 1' which is "any diagnostic or therapeutic service that is necessary to prevent the immediate death or serious impairment of the health of an individual." The hospital reviews all medical priorities prior to approving any referrals.

Last year, the Rosebud Hospital had an outpatient service called 'Urgent Care' located across from the Emergency Room window and whose purpose was to respond to urgent medical needs and which were not considered priority 1. This reduced the routine flow of patients experienced by emergency room personnel, however, it lead to some confusion on the part of patients who were in need of some form of immediate care.

Management then moved the 'Urgent Care' component and re-named it the 'Convenience Care Clinic' to avoid the confusion. Convenience Care Clinic hours are 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. from Monday through Friday according to the report. It will serve the same function in helping to relieve the triage procedure and medical urgencies which are not life threatening.

Finally, the amount of contract health services funds paid out for a variety of referral services is outlined in the report and in descending order the top three expenditures are for radiology, surgery and pharmacy services. For fiscal year 2004, radiology services amounted to $386,553.00, expenditures for surgery was $247,754.00, while pharmacy services was at $199,092.00. The report notes that the hospital needs to "evaluate processes that will allow us to expand the services that we provide within the facility thereby reducing the cost of expenditures through the CHS program."

The regular on-air report delivered by CEO Harris to the RST tribal council is a continuation of the openness in tribal government and is a way to keep information flowing to the RST tribal membership while keeping them informed of issues which directly effect their well-being. The report documents the positive direction in which the hospital has embarked and it will require more time and patience as management works to reduce the deficit to zero.

On March 8, 2006, the Rosebud service unit achieved its Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) accreditation, which is all-important to continued delivery of health care services to the Sicangu people and that is also a positive occurrence; such status is akin to a university gaining accreditation of its ability to offer degree programs.

State legislative election

Semans said, "Now, the senate race is going to be tough. 38 percent of the Todd, Tripp and Mellette voters are Indian and 62 percent are non-Indian. We are trying to keep the voter registration alive going in order to edge up those numbers. Unless people vote in numbers, we are going to have a problem."

Some interesting voter statistics include the fact that in District 26 there are 1,942 registered Republicans and 1,144 registered Democrats. In District 26A there are 1,391 Republican voters and 4,641 registered Democrats. In District 27 there are 3,362 registered Republicans voters and 8,442 registered Democrats.

In Todd County the unofficial lists shows there are 809 Republican voters and 3,989 Democrats registered. State wide there are 231,684 unofficial Republican voters and 184,780 registered Democrats. There are 66,341 registered Independents.

Semans has arrived at a couple of observations as a result of his voter registration activities and he was eager to share them. He noted, "Native Americans will vote for a qualified non-Indian if they feel they can help more than an Indian. A non-Indian will not vote for an Indian candidate even if he feels he can help."

"If two non-Indians are up against each other and who ever does not seek the Indian vote is not going to win."

Finally, he also noted that Cherry-Todd Electric serves a customer base that is comprised of 82 percent Native Americans and there are no Indians on the board of directors. Semans said, "Todd County is the poorest county in the nation and Cherry-Todd is the eighth richest cooperative in the country. We have to pay a certain fee for yardage and so forth. We pay as much as the millionaires do in Cherry County."

The upcoming election will see the effect that re-districting as ordered by Judge Karen Schrier which will have on voters in south central South Dakota.

After a good deal of discussion on a new eviction policy and procedures exclusive to NAHASDA/HUD units, the council voted 7-9 to turn down the proposed eviction policies. The new policy would have set up a special judge to hear eviction cases. Lydia Bear Killer, council representative from Pass Creek district, moved to have the same special judge review past eviction cases to determine if policies and procedures were followed. Bear Killer's motion lost by the same 7-9 vote.

The meeting in Manderson opened with complaints filed against Juanita Scherich by the Medicine Root district, against Walt Big Crow and Paul Little by Garfield Steele and a fourth complaint unnamed.

"Has the research been done, if we accept any of these will we be putting any of the council representatives under double jeopardy?" asked both Lyle Jack and Garfield Steele, "have each of these complaints been reviewed by the tribal attorney?"

Will Peters made a motion to hear the complaints and them decide whether to accept any of them; the resolution passed 8-6 with two not voting.

"I've never seen clear water turn into wojapi as quick as it did today," said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge Village.

"So we can get on with business, make sure all of the research is done and deal with the questions of double jeopardy, I move to table," said Garfield Steele. The council voted 8-6 with two not voting to table and set up a special session to deal with the complaints and a very outdated impeachment ordinance.

Crystal Eagle Elk presented a proposed general fund budget with some tinkering from her office and the finance committee became balanced at $4.786 million for the time being as everyone understood that there will be both additional revenue and many more expenditure requests. Council voted 10-6 to accept the general fund budget. On Wednesday, the indirect cost budget was tabled to a time when a full report could be given by a vote of 15-2 with one not voting.

Struggling with the idea of OST Department of Public Safety officers making arrests of tribal members in Whiteclay and transporting them to Rushville to the Sheridan County jail the council barely voted to continue support the memorandum of agreement with the state of Nebraska to cross deputize officers so they may patrol Whiteclay 10-8.

By a vote of 12-6, the council voted to table a resolution to support the Lakota Nation Ikce Wicasa Okolakiciye which included receiving 1,200 acres in the Black Hills from the Oglala Sioux Tribe and set up a special meeting for information and bring it back to the July regular meeting.

Ruth Brown, chair of the land committee, had the land committee broadcast live earlier in the week to read for the record the proposed new grazing ordinance in preparation for Wednesday's council meeting. Stating that she had encouraged input from across the reservation, Brown made a motion to support a new grazing ordinance. The new ordinance was tabled 10-8 on a motion by Ella John Carlow, seconded by Kathy Janis.

Additional actions taken by the council last week included: 15-1 to approve an engineering contract with Dakota Engineering for the tribe's transit program, 12-4 to approve a three year extension on the Dakota Engineering contract, 14-1-1 to approve the adding of Ruth Brown to the economic and business development committee, 15-0-1 to support COUP's proposal for wind energy employment training program, 9-7 to approve the TERO budget, 14-1 to have each tribal program prepare a report on the upcoming federal budget cuts and their potential impact on the tribe and tribal programs, 13-2-1 to approve an attorney's contract with Sonosky, Chambers, Sachse, Endreson and Perry, 7-9 defeating a resolution to waive the revenue requirements of the TERO ordinance on the Prairie Wind Casino Expansion project.

The council voted 11-5 to approve Peska Construction for the interior design work for the casino project and voted 9-6-1 to approve the a drawdown.

Council chooses Brown Eyes for permanent project manager

PINE RIDGE - Tuesday, the tribal council selected Lenart Brown Eyes in a 10-8 vote over Mark Landon of Parkside Design to be the permanent project manager for the Prairie Wind Casino expansion project.

The casino expansion project has struggled through a series of project managers since construction began last fall. Tim Bowman was in first the role that represents the tribe in construction decisions and oversees the tribe's interests as the $20 million project evolves. Rick Shangreaux was placed in the role on a temporary basis in October and Lenart Brown Eyes was later selected as the temporary project manager in November.

"This is something we needed from the very beginning," said Lyle Jack, council representative from Pine Ridge and chair of the economic and business development committee, "now we need to maintain continuity and have Cora Whiting, Cecelia Fire Thunder's representative and Brown Eyes work together in the best interests of the tribe and getting this project done in a good and timely manner."

The council voted 18-0 to accept Brown Eyes in the position on a permanent basis and to send his proposal on to Margaret Lineberry, the construction attorney, to write up a contract that will be signed off by the tribal president.

Official: No Child loophole doesn't mean Indian students ignored in state stats

PIERRE (AP) - Even though a provision of the No Child Left Behind law lets schools avoid reporting the test scores of small groups of minority students, South Dakota is not ignoring the needs of American Indian students, state Education Secretary Rick Melmer said.

South Dakota schools do not have to issue separate reports for any group of fewer than 10 students. But each student's score is counted at the state level when test results showing the annual progress of students are broken down into racial groups and other categories, Melmer said.

Nationwide, schools are not counting the test scores of nearly half the American Indian students when they report the progress of students by racial categories. In South Dakota, 7.4 percent of Indian students' test scores are not reported as separate categories by schools, according to a computer analysis by The Associated Press.

Hispanics and blacks have about 10 percent of their scores excluded nationwide, and more than one-third of Asian scores aren't broken out, AP found. Less than 2 percent of white children's scores aren't being counted as a separate category.

To calculate a nationwide estimate, AP analyzed the 2003-04 enrollment figures the government collected for those grades -- the latest on record -- and applied the current racial category exemptions their states use.

South Dakota officials are well aware that Indian students' scores in math and reading are below the state average, and it is working to improve minority students' performance, Melmer said. South Dakota has hired a coordinator for Indian education, and one of the goals of the state's education improvement plan is to improve education for Indian students, he said.

"I would like to think we're sure taking steps to make it better," Melmer said.

The AP's national computer analysis found that states are finding ways for their public schools to avoid penalties under the No Child Left Behind law by not counting the test scores of nearly 2 million students when they issue reports on the progress of students by racial groups.

Under the law championed by President Bush, all students must achieve proficiency in reading and math by 2014. Schools receiving federal aid also must demonstrate that students in all racial categories are meeting performance goals or risk penalties that include extending their school year, changing their curriculum or firing their administrators and teachers.

The 2002 law requires public schools to test more than 25 million students periodically in reading and math, reporting the school's overall measure of success. No students' scores can be excluded from the overall measure.

But the schools also must report scores by categories, such as race, poverty, migrant status, English proficiency and special education. Failure in any category means the whole school fails.

States are helping schools get around that second requirement by using a loophole in the law that allows schools to ignore scores of racial groups that are too small to be statistically significant.

The U.S. Education Department has granted different states widely varying exemptions, and some states allow schools to ignore racial breakdowns when they have 30, 40 or even 50 students of a particular race.

South Dakota has set the cutoff at 10, meaning a school does not have to report the scores by category for any group of 9 or fewer students.

"Does it hurt minority kids? I don't think it does," Melmer said. "The state is still responsible for that child."

American Indian students are by far the largest minority group in South Dakota's schools. Last year's state report card showed that although 82 percent of all the tested students were proficient in reading, only 59 percent of Indian students were proficient.

Melmer said the main reason for not reporting test scores for categories that have only a few students is to protect students' privacy. If a small school had four students in a category and reported that category's average test scores, people in the community would know who those students are, he said.

Smaller groups are considered statistically insignificant, so it would be unfair to penalize a school for the performance of a few students, officials have said.

Also, South Dakota has a rule that allows schools to exclude the scores of students who move in later in the school year, Melmer said. That avoids penalizing a school for the performance of a newly arrived student because that student's test score is not a good indication of how well the school is educating children, he said.

To be included in a school's results, a student must be in the school from October through the annual testing done in April, Melmer said.

Some of the American Indian students whose scores are not reported in racial categories are probably excluded because they were not in a particular school for the entire year, Melmer said. Poor families tend to move more often than more affluent families, and many Indian families are in low-income categories, he said.

Overall, AP found that about 1.9 million students -- or about 1 in every 14 test scores -- aren't being counted under the law's racial categories. Minorities were seven times as likely to have their scores excluded as whites, the analysis showed.

In South Dakota, 3.8 percent of all students are not counted in school reports of such categories. Although less than 1 percent of white students' scores were excluded, 7.4 percent of the Indian students were not reported by schools as subgroups.

A total of 828 Indian students' scores were not reported by schools in racial categories. Those students were scattered throughout state -- two in one school, four in another, as many as nine in other schools.

On Indian reservations, of course, Indians constitute the majority of students and are reported in racial categories.

Donna DeKraai, president of the South Dakota Education Association, the state's main teachers union, said it makes sense not to report groups of fewer than 10 students because that protects students' privacy.

"I don't think South Dakota's intent ever was to hide any of the results," DeKraai said.

"South Dakota did a very good job of trying to make sure it was very reasonable. The main thing was it didn't infringe on the confidentiality of any ethnic group," DeKraai said.

Melmer acknowledges that some have criticized the No Child Left Behind law for causing teachers to spend a lot of time preparing students for the annual tests, but he said that preparation involves a review of what the students need to know. The tests measure whether the students have learned that material, he said.

Students must be tested annually in grades 3 through 8 and at least once in high school, usually in 10th grade. This is the first school year that students in all those grades must be tested, though schools have been reporting scores by race for the tests they have been administering since the law passed.

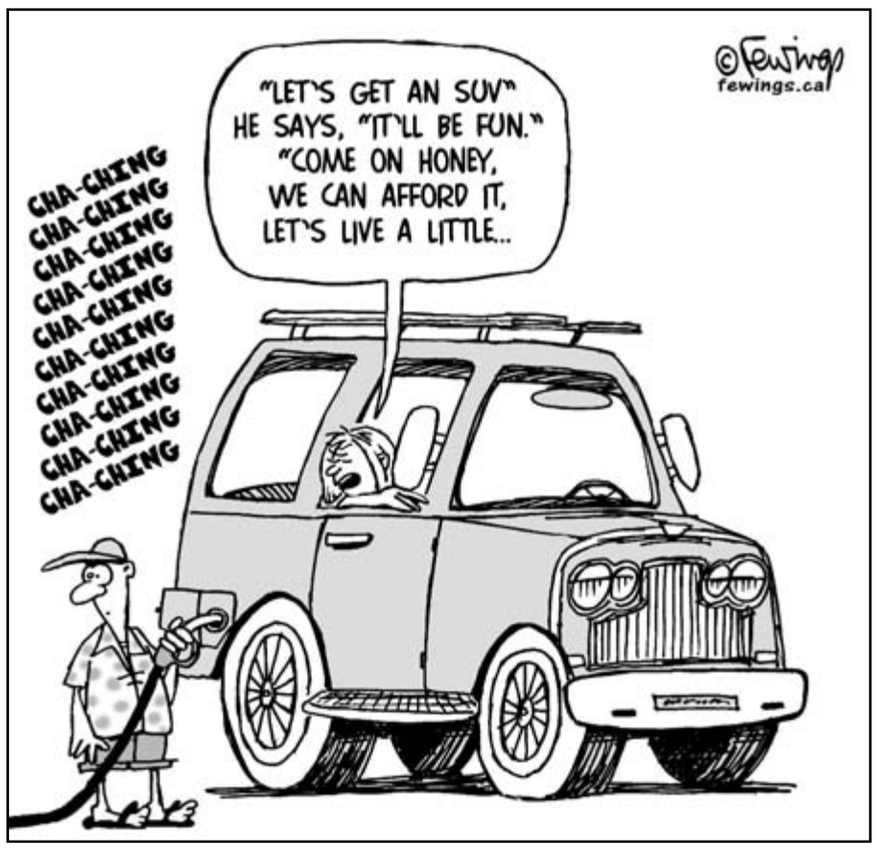
Gas prices on the rise!

Gas prices are on the rise again and this time it looks like it will be here for awhile.

In some places, the price per gallon has gone up to $3 a gallon.

The energy department said the average for regular will be $2.62 a gallon and will continue to rise to up to 10 to 15 cents per gallon in the next several weeks.

It adds up to 25 cents more than last year at this time.



According the associated press reports, the high prices are expected to peak in May and drop off in late summer.

Why, the high prices? The weather, what happened last year with the hurricanes affected the price of gas and if we get another round of hurricanes, we are surely going to see the price of gas rise even more.

Another look at the issue is that in the long run, it affects us in other ways, as other prices rise for consumer goods, because somewhere along the way, it has to be added in so stores can still manage to make a profit.

It gets tough, as those higher prices eventually effect us, even if we don't have a car and have to buy gas.

It affects us in our families as we live in a high poverty area and it affects the tribal government as the people's demands grows.

Notes From Indian Country

Saving the children in the here and now

By Tim Giago

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The first time I heard the word "brainwashing," was during the Korean Conflict. Back then several GI's underwent this procedure while prisoners of war. Afterwards, they shifted their allegiance to the North Koreans and Chinese.

The analogy would be like removing someone's brain, washing it clean of all it contained and then re-programming it with a different set of values, philosophy, religion, and political beliefs. This happened to many Native Americans. It happened in the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian mission boarding schools.

It is happening again today on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota.

The president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Cecelia Fire Thunder, proposed building a Planned Parenthood Clinic on the reservation after the nearly all-white legislative body of South Dakota passed HB1215 banning all abortions in the state and made no exceptions for rape or incest. Fire Thunder immediately became a target of the anti-abortion movement and worse yet, a target of some of her own people.

Let's stop for a minute and look at what Fire Thunder had in mind. First of all and foremost, she wanted a Planned Parenthood Clinic that would help the women of the reservation find treatment for the myriad of problems they face, problems that include rape, incest, teen pregnancies, AIDS, other sexually transmitted diseases, and terrible spousal and boyfriend abuse. And, as a last resort, the opportunity to obtain an abortion in a case of rape or incest.

The teen pregnancy rate on the reservation is far above the national average. The number of babies born with Fetal Alcohol Syndrome caused by alcoholic and drug addicted mothers is steadily increasing and many of those babies have since grown into adults that are wreaking havoc with the lives of innocent people.

Some violent FAS teenagers appears to have no conscience. They often rob, kill, abuse and maim without remorse. And as their numbers grow so will the increase in violent crimes. Far too many girls of high school age are dropping out of school because they got pregnant. These are problems that have grown to epidemic proportions and as a former nurse; Fire Thunder has had a front row seat to this ongoing disaster. Planned Parenthood offers lessons and products specifically for birth control.

Rather than debate the issue in a mature manner, some are already calling for Fire Thunder's impeachment. Fire Thunder saw a problem. She expressed her concerns and suggested a possible solution. Is expressing an opinion now an impeachable offense? I would say only to those who have a political agenda. The juvenile code some dissenters are using against Fire Thunder has never been enacted into law. And even if it had, it can certainly be amended to coincide with the more traditional beliefs.

Let's get back to brainwashing. Some of the Indian people vehemently opposed to a Planned Parenthood Clinic are devout Catholics or of other religious denominations. When they first took up the mantle of Christianity they stepped outside of the beliefs of their ancestors. They embraced the religious beliefs of the foreigners who came to the shores of this continent determined to convert the Indian people to their own beliefs and to force them to denounce their own cultural and traditional beliefs.

There are far too many children on Indian reservations that have been abandoned and left to be raised by their grandparents, or worse, left in the hands of social welfare agencies. Until the Indian Child Welfare Act came along these unfortunate children were often adopted out to non-Indians, especially to white church groups who then passed them on to members of their parish.

Louis Winters, a friend of mine and former classmate from Holy Rosary Indian Mission, with the help of then Senator Tom Daschle, set up a home for abused and abandoned children in Pine Ridge Village. He has had to fight with all of his might to secure funds and help every year to feed, clothe and heal these damaged children. Where were all of those Lakota people now attacking Ms. Fire Thunder when "Louie Boy" Winters needed their help?

Fire Thunder is a strong woman. As such she has drawn the wrath of some male politicians who fear her forward-looking ideologies. She is the first woman ever to be elected president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. She has taken a strong stand for the rights of women. Could it be that some Lakota men fear that their women may have found a voice?

Perhaps some of those who would derail Fire Thunder's idea of having a Planned Parenthood Clinic on the reservation should start making an effort to help those children, some of them still babies, that have been abandoned and abused. These children are alive in the real world and in dire need of any kind of help.

One Lakota wicasa wakan (Holy Man) told me on the condition that I protect his anonymity, that those people attacking Fire Thunder do not know their own cultural history and he used the term I used at the beginning of this column. He said, "They have been so 'brainwashed' into thinking like the white man that they can no longer think as an Indian. Traditionally Indian men never interfered with the rights of a woman to do whatever it was she chose to do when it came to having or not having a child. He always assumed that the woman knew what she was doing and didn't need direction from any man."

One can only hope that those critics who have been so brainwashed as to abandon their traditional beliefs will go back to their roots and look at this proposed clinic with an open mind.

Being responsible for the sacred bundle comes with responsiblity

Dear Editor,

The other day I was talking to a good friend of mine about this newspaper and why there is lack of Native Americans in major colleges when it comes to sports?

No Native Americans in professional sports. I said there is one hockey player named Jordon TooToo and there isn't any publication on this man. This man has taken a big step in this country to open that door.

When we are dealing with deep racism in sports and are considered nothing more than mascots. Yet we have brothers and sisters that are dying in the military.

Recently things were said about our chief Arvol Looking Horse and the sacred bundle.

At first I was very upset, about the disrespect that was shown to our uncle and our sacred bundle. I'm sitting here in this correctional institute and even I know never to question this sacred bundle and where it came from and where it has been and where it is going.

This scared bundle is what always sustained us as people, and it will always be the center of who and what we are as Lakotas.

Then I got to thinking why would anyone question this sacred bundle and disrespect it after all it's been through.

The Christians and the Catholics and all other religions in between that came to our people. A lot of people turned their back on this sacred bundle and questioned it, because of what these other religions were saying about it.

Now I don't know if these native turned their back because they believed that these other religions wore better than our sacred bundle?

Or that something was going to come from the sky and save them as they are told by these other religions. So to this day, I don't know how anyone could question the sacredness of this bundle?

This bundle has protected itself and our people through everything and no matter where you are in this life and you walk with the spirit of this sacred bundle, you will never be alone and for people like me, I had to step back in tradition to step forward in life.

Stepping back to the ceremonies helped me and brothers and sisters like me to rediscover ourselves so I say before any one questions our uncle and how he cares for the sacred bundle, they need to question themselves first, because I don't think a lot of people can handle the responsibility that comes with this.

You know the old saying, before you talk the talk , you need to walk the talk.

Tribes can raise the money and make Allen an offer he can't refuse

The following Rapid City Journal editorial was published April 6.

The Meade County Commission unanimously approved a beer license for a proposed Sturgis rally bar and campground near Bear Butte. In doing so, commissioners ignored hundreds of demonstrators who marched outside the Meade County Courthouse, urging the commission to preserve the sanctity of Bear Butte, which is considered sacred ground by about 60 American Indian tribes.

The commission had no reason to deny Allen a beer license because it has approved other license applications under similar circumstances.

Allen bought the land north of Bear Butte with the intention of developing it into a destination for rally goers. Meade County zoning laws allow Allen to build his proposed Sturgis County Line bar, campground and concert stage about two and one-half miles north of Bear Butte despite the fact that many Indian tribes consider the mountain a sacred site.

The Bear Butte International Alliance opposes Allen's plans because it is too close to Bear Butte and has called on Meade County to refuse beer and liquor licenses within seven miles of Bear Butte.

One way to preserve Bear Butte as a sacred site is to buy nearby land with the intention of keeping it as open space.

Encroachment on Bear Butte will continue to be an issue in the future. Based on the hundreds of people who peacefully demonstrated against Allen's license application, Meade County officials ought to consider enacting zoning that would limit commercial development near the state park.

There is plenty of land near Sturgis for biker bars, campgrounds and concert venues that won't encroach on Bear Butte. However, Allen has a right to use his land in a manner consistent with existing zoning laws, and the county commission had no legal basis to deny Allen a beer license. If groups want to protect Bear Butte from Allen's proposed Sturgis County Line bar, they can raise money and make Allen an offer he won't refuse.

Conversing with Jesse and Charlie about Lakota language

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I stopped in at the Allstop café and grocery store in Rosebud a couple days ago and ran into Charlie Colombe and Jesse Bear, who is employed at the store. Jesse is a former CHR director for the tribe and after listening to a conversation between him and Charlie; I realized that there are many people who are concerned about the proper usage of the Lakota language.

Jesse explained that there is Lakota word usage in use today that is inaccurate, and his father pointed this out on several occasions. He was telling us that his father said that it was better to learn both languages, so that one could survive and it was also a sign of someone quite intelligent to be able to make the transition back and forth.

Charlie spoke of a dynamic that I have always been fascinated with and that is seeing two people chatting with each other. One is talking English and the other is talking Lakota and the conversation is going back and forth perfectly well. I think that when you consider the many intellectual and linguistic functions that have to happen very quickly, it points out how complex the Lakota language is.

I also make the point that the Lakota language is tremendously complex and you can never convince me that the people from the beginning of time were simple in their communication and formation of language. There are some mighty intelligent Lakota people out there who are struggling to learn the language, much less pronounce some of the very simple words.

I have witnessed the redundant manner in which our Lakota children are required in schools to learn colors, animals and numbers.

That is fine, except they need to apply those concepts and fold them into their speech and communication. It would be better to have them simply attempt to converse in Lakota using basic words, much like English speaking children do.

What is even worse is that I don't see the language curriculum getting more complex as the children move up the grades and it needs to.

Getting back to the conversation with Charlie and Jesse and me as an eavesdropper and interested third party, Jesse said there are those with high profiles who have a sense of Lakota and they need to work to get it out there to the people.

I think he was starting to look my way when he said that as I try to integrate Lakota into my writing as the occasion calls for it. It's a great gift to have and I admire those who still possess Lakota as a first and second language.

In recent years, I have stepped up my efforts to read, write and understand the language. I think I will always be on the verge of fluency and that is a good place to be. I actually learn a new word each day if I get the opportunity to listen to real Lakota speakers.

For example, I listened to Floyd Hand as he addressed the RST tribal council. In his closing prayers, he used some words that I did not quite understand. I don't think it is that dialectical differences between Pine Ridge and Rosebud that some speak of, but perhaps it is.

Jesse said that one should not use akicita when referring to the police, but rather canksa uha which makes reference to the fact that they carry a night stick. There is also another word that refers to the fact that they must uphold the law, but I didn't catch that word. It might have been woope oyuspe, but I am not sure and will have to clarify with Jesse as I told him I would interview him about his knowledge of language use. He also said that one never says nape ci uza as "uza" means "to marry" and one never goes around marrying someone else's hand. More appropriately he said that we should use nape icigluspapi which means, "I take your hand." I have also heard John Around Him use the phrase nape a u which means "extend your hand" or bring your hand here.

It was good to hear Alex White Plume as he also spoke to the RST tribal council and announced that we should all speak Lakota as we discuss treaty council business. He said that the white man speaks of the 'melting pot' but such a thing is not prevalent in Lakota country as we are Lakota even if we have just a bit of Lakota blood.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (nagik sapa) Sicangu Lakota, is a decorated Vietnam Veteran with a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and resides on the Rosebud.

Things to empower yourself

"Sticks and stones can break my bones, but words can never hurt me." UGHHH-HHHHHH! FALSE!

By Patty Pourier

Emotional abuse is hurtful. It is all about winning, being in power and control, in order to make themselves feel better when the perpetrator abuses you. Emotional and verbal abuses are closely related in that the verbal abuse produces emotional trauma. Yelling is at one end of the spectrum while "the passive" (but lethal) silent treatment is at the other end of emotional abuse. Emotional abuse is damaging because it outlives its own life span. The person who has been abused hears the perpetrators verbal abuse words over, and over again in their own head. Many times this abusive broken record plays even after the abuser is dead.

Emotional abuse robs us of a sense of security and value. Because you never know what to expect- you are left feeling unsafe and that someone else's words control you. With an abuser who uses words to hurt- you will never get the last word in, you can never win.

Emotional abuse creates guilt. Messages like, "It's all your fault", come from the perpetrator. Thoughts like, "If I just tell them I'm sorry, or it my fault for something I did not do, maybe they will stop verbally abusing me."

Verbal abuse can also be in the form of a letter or note.

Emotional abuse creates anger. Emotional abusers are often rage-aholics, they often do not remember what happened during their verbal episode, or minimize it to themselves and others.

Just like physical and sexual abuse, the victim is left feeling as if they have no value or worth.

I know a lot about this subject because, as many of us, I have been on both sides of this abuse. When I was in elementary school, my sister used to tell me it was my fault my dad drank. She would say, if I would just treat him better he wouldn't drink.

On the other side of the coin, when I was 19 years old and a young stepmother, I yelled at my stepsons. I now work with them every day in our business and have the opportunity to show then and tell them through my actions, that I respect them, and they are worthwhile and valuable.

None of us are ever perfect. But trying to make healthier choices and to grow to not be a victim of emotional abuse nor an abuser. Being personally responsible for our actions and reactions is growth.

A person shared with me a verbal (emotional) attack they encountered recently. They kept control of their emotions and words as the attack took place.

Reacting by "losing it" or going berserk because someone else "lost it" or went berserk never helps the situation, but always makes it worse. It takes a strong person to choose peace in that situation. With Easter being last weekend, I was reminded that Jesus chose peace when being abused.

What do you relate to, the abuser or the victim or both? Have you taken personal responsibility for your abusive behavior including words that hurt others?

The funny thing about this is, when you take responsibility for your own actions of abuse great things can happen.

First admitting you were wrong is important.

Second saying you are sorry. My granddaughter used to tell me, "I am sorry are just two little words". She was right. Words without corresponding action are useless and have little meaning. Changing our behavior and choosing peace are actions that show remorse.

I have been trying to make better choices for myself and the people around me. I encourage you to try to do the same.

You won't do it perfect, but trying makes all the difference.

Boycott to protect Mata Paha

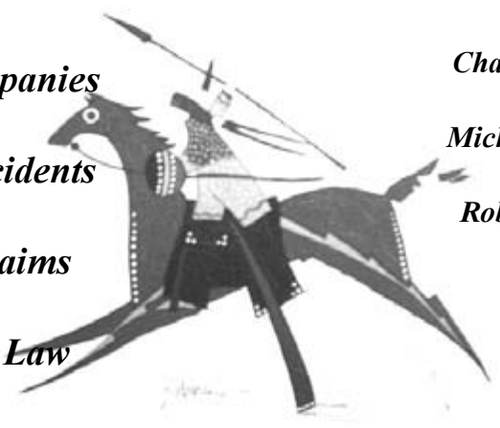
Dear Editor:

While hundreds gathered last week to protect Mato Paha, hundreds of thousands are gearing up for the annual Sturgis Bike Rally. What will stop them from coming and desecrating our sacred mountain? Prayers? Protests? Maybe a little of both.

During oral testimony before the Meade County Commissioners last week, Broken Spoke Saloon owner, Jay Allen, stated that he was "embarrassed that his liquor application process has escalated to this level" and further stated that "I have the utmost respect and admiration for the Indian people here today". One of his bar maids testified to his character saying that, "Jay says what he means and means what he says". If Jay Allen really had admiration for Indians, he would scrap plans for his proposed 600 acre "lawless" biker bar/campground/amphitheater. If Jay Allen had utmost respect he would preserve the land in its natural state to protect it from development, or better yet, donate it to Tribes.

Jay Allen is not motivated by Indian demonstrations or petition drives to stop his development plans. The only sacred to Jay Allen seems to be money. We must stop the flow of money!

This week, we are launching an international marketing campaign to boycott ALL Broken Spoke Saloons nationwide. We have to remain realistic. We cannot succeed in an all-out boycott of the Sturgis Rally. However, we can propose that the bikers boycott the Broken Spoke Saloon, The Sturgis County Line Bar/Campground, (if it ever gets built) The Dragpipe Saloon, Glencoe Campground, Full Throttle Saloon and any other development near Mato Paha.



If you have access to a computer, spread the word. There are informational websites, like www.matopaha.org or www.bringbacktheway.com that you can pass on to friends worldwide. We need everyone's help to spread the word to biker groups to initiate this boycott. There is a big bike rally coming up in May in Daytona Beach, FL. Jay Allen has a Broken Spoke Saloon there. He relies on this annual rally to make money! Let's show him that we mean what we say, and we say what WE mean!

FAMILY EMERGENCY HEALTH INFORMATION

It is important to think about health issues that could arise if a flu pandemic occurs and how they could affect you and your loved ones. For example, if a mass vaccination clinic is set up in your community, you may need to provide as much information as you can about your medical history when you go, especially if you have a serious health condition or allergy. Gather important health records (like vaccination card) in a folder or binder marked 'Health Records' and keep them in one place. Remember to include information on your pets.

Create a family emergency health plan using this information. Fill in information for each family member in the space provided. Like much of the planning for a pandemic, this can also help prepare for other emergencies.

BEFORE* a pandemic may occur, share the family member information and emergency contacts lists with your clinic and community-based health care providers, someone you trust (another family member) but who doesn't live with you and the emergency contact person who resides outside the area in which you live.)

PANDEMIC FLU PLANNING CHECKLIST FOR INDIVIDUALS AND FAMILIES

You can prepare for a world-wide influenza outbreak ("flu pandemic"). You should know what can happen during a pandemic and what actions you can take to reduce the effects of a flu pandemic on you and your family. A flu pandemic could last for 6-8 weeks in a community and may return several times.

Although all levels of government are preparing for a possible flu pandemic, personal planning is important because some community businesses and services may be disrupted or closed, including:

- ⇨ School, childcare and work
- ⇨ Public transportation and availability of gasoline and other fuels
- ⇨ Grocery Stores, banks, gas stations, and other businesses
- ⇨ Communications, including telephone, radio and television
- ⇨ Utilities - electricity, gas
- ⇨ Pharmacies and health care

This checklist will help you gather the information and resources you may need in case a flu pandemic or other emergency interrupts normal business activities

1. Assemble a Disaster Supplies Kit. Make sure that you consider the needs of family members with special needs. The Kit should include the following items:

- ☒ Water and food supplies. During a pandemic, you may not be able to get supplies from stores, so it is important for you to have extras on hand. This can be useful in other emergencies, such as power outages.
- ☒ At least 30 days supply of important medication. Ask your doctor and/or pharmacist if you can get an extra supply of your regular prescription drugs.
- ☒ Nonprescription drugs and other health supplies. These include pain relievers, stomach remedies, cough and cold medicines, fluids with electrolytes (e.g. sports drinks) and vitamins, Band-Aids, antibacterial ointments, tape and gauze.

2. Create a family emergency health plan. List emergency contact information. Consider how family members would be cared for if they got sick and what would be needed to care for them.

3. Get involved. Volunteer with local groups and health centers to prepare and assist with emergency response. Your community needs help as it works to prepare.

4. Keep informed. Tune into news from radio, television and newspapers.

5. To limit the spread of germs and prevent infection:

- ☒ Make sure that you and your family are up to date on vaccinations.
- ☒ Wash hands often with soap and water and teach this to children.
- ☒ Cover coughs and sneezes with tissues and teach this to children
- ☒ Stay away from others as much as possible if they are sick and teach this to children.
- ☒ Stay home from work and school if sick.

Information modified from www.pandemicflu.gov

Store food that:

- Are non perishable (will keep for along time) and don't require refrigeration
- Are easy to prepare
- Require little or not water, so that you can conserve water for drinking

Oglala Lakota share treaty council information with RST council

Spiritual summit discussed and issue of women on treaty council clarified

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

Alex White Plume

ROSEBUD - In a regularly scheduled RST tribal council meeting held on Thursday, April 13 and aired over KINI radio, the RST council welcomed a couple of special guest from "wiohpeyatakiya" or from the west.

Alex White Plume, vice president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and Floyd Hand addressed the Rosebud Sioux tribal council on Thursday on a variety of issues related to their Black Hills treaty council. They discussed the manner in which women are recognized in Oglala country as far as their involvement on the treaty council is concerned, while making a formal request to utilize the camping facilities at Bear Butte owned by RST during a "Spiritual Summit" during July 4.

Hand explained that the Oglala have been rather active in their treaty council, while encouraging the RST tribal council to look the laws, which govern treaty council activity. Hand explained that he grew up on the Rosebud area. He is now a respected elder who lives among the Oglala.

RST Antelope council representative, Robert Moore addressed the council and noted, "I am honored and wished you could spend all afternoon with us, and Saturday, Sunday and over Monday and Tuesday. I deeply regret any confusion that may have prevailed, in developing a treaty council that helps us and helps us understand their roles. We did look at resolutions. It established a treaty commission. One established a charter, which separated it from the IRA. "

Moore made a "Motion to establish an interim Sicangu treaty council to establish an ordinance and staffing plan in the next 60 days." It was seconded by Fern Bordeaux-Bolz. Moore said, "There is an existing draft ordinance for the treaty council review. We have met with an owner of a tribally owned business. We have a local agency that can help them with their ordinance. I would like to identify some individuals. In the governmental affairs committee, some members of the treaty council and council should start visiting this afternoon and come back on Tuesday with 5-7 names, with education, speakers and compassion who have this in their heart." The motion was approved by a vote of 14-0 with 4 not voting.

RST tribal president, Rodney Bordeaux, asked White Plume to comment on the issue of a female serving on the treaty council. He said, "The issue of a winyan has been controversial." Bordeaux also noted the fact

Garnette gives inspiration message to Porcupine students

PORCUPINE - Jodi Lynn Garnette recently spoke to Porcupine School students on setting goals and gave an inspirational message to the students on achieving success in their life.

Jodi Garnette, spoke to students on achieveing on their goals.

Garnette, 21, whose Lakota names is Kilapi Win is a graduate from Porcupine School in 1999, and lives in Porcupine. She went to high school in Pine Ridge and Little Wound and eventually completely her GED and worked in Wanblee. She told the students, "I made a drastic change in my life and went to alcohol treatment at Hope Lodge in Rapid City and then enlisted in the United State Army. I passed all the required tests and signed up for four years active and four years inactive."

She told the students, "I chose to go into the Army because I have always wanted to be a soldier in the Army. Secondly, I wanted to make some positive changes in my life and I knew the Army will give me that opportunity."

"Throughout my years of growing up here on the reservation I noticed many of the well respected people served their country," she said.

"Thirdly, I want to look back on my life when I am older and say, yes, I wanted to join the Army when I was young and I did it. I don't want to look back and say, I have always wanted to do that, but I couldn't," she added.

She said she enjoyed the time so far she has spent in Army, although boot camp was tough and she got through it with a lot of dedication, persistence and hard work. "I learned new things everyday and experienced many new things," she said.

She graduated from boot camp in Fort Jackson, S.C. and went on to aviation school in Fort Rucker, Ala. and graduated from there in March of 2006. She graduated as aviation operation specialist and received her wings.

Her first duty station is Camp Casey in Korea and she will be leaving soon and said she is excited.

"From the time I made a choice to become an alcohol and drug free, my life took many different turns for the positive and that I am proud of myself. My message to the youth is keep dreaming and follow those dreams, anything is possible if you make those changes within yourself and look forward to those challenges," she said.

"With God all things are possible, the sky is the limit and I am reaching for the stars," she concluded.

The other side of Dawn Around Him

BY HAZEL BONNER
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - Dawn Around Him joins many other inmates at the South Dakota Women's Prison. She was sentenced to 15 years. Around Him is an inmate with special needs who needs a great deal more help that this women's prison will provide.

There is also some question about her guilt. Was she really driving that night? She was assaulted that night, that was very clear. Didn't the driver of the van actually assault her when she became hysterical over the accident that killed the jogger?

But she pleaded guilty to vehicular homicide. What evidence did they really have? What kind of an investigation did the Rapid City Police Department do? They never even picked up her personal belongings, because I have them.

Around him had a hard life and probably shouldn't have received 15 years. She was in the custody of an Aunt on the Pine Ridge Reservation. She never finished high school but told the police that she was a student at Oglala Lakota College.

That statement made me wonder and I checked at the college and she was not a student and never had been. I then decided to do some investigating and learned that she is handicapped, with a mental capacity of a young child.

So, I began visiting her in the jail. She was having a very hard time. I visited her until I had some medical problems that put me in the hospital for most of January and the first part of February. I did not visit her again after I got out of the Hospital because I was recovering from open heart surgery.

Did you ever wonder why whites who hit Indians while driving do not get 15 year sentences. My heart is with her as she leaves for the South Dakota Women's prison. I hope she writes to me from prison.

I recall writing the story about the horrible conditions at SDSP. Around Him received little care at the Pennington County Jail. I don't know if she ever received the medication she was taking when she entered the jail. She comes to SDSP with many needs and will probably be on "mental health status" on several occasions and may end up in Administrative Segregation. She does not belong there!

Dr. Stephen Manlove, a Rapid City Psychiatrist, stated in a letter regarding another patient, the following:

"The Eighth Amendment has served as the origin for the right to treatment for prisoners. It prohibits cruel and unusual punishments. Since inmates are dependant on correctional officials for medical care, failure to provide that casre can represent what has been called "the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain". Estelle v. Gamble. … set the standard for provision of medical care in the incarcerated population. It set out the "deliberate indifference" standard in outlining the conditions which lack of care would violate the Eighth Amendment. Deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of prisoners constitutes, "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain" proscribed by the Eighth Amendment.

I believe that if she were to plead guilty, she should have pleaded Guilty but mentally ill. However that would not have meant that she would get any mental health treatment. When that verdict has been made it simply points out that mental illness may be an issue. In our state there is not special treatment for such individuals because mentally ill inmates are never transferred to the Human Services Center for psychiatric care.

Thus the over 300 inmates at SDSP, of which at least 40 percent are mentally ill, have been joined by another inmate with very special needs. Please, treat her kindly!

Special summit discussed

that the Rosebud Sioux tribe owns forty acres in the Black Hills. White Plume said, "That is internal here and pick best people who will represent you. At Pine Ridge the women stepped back. They said, 'Men do something, but we are going to keep eyes on you.' Now , the pressure is on us men. My tiospaye is matriarchal. I let my wife go out and talk. If you put a woman on treaty council, you need to solve this internal fight yourself It is a difficult decision. We men used to be beat down, so we didn't stand up as warrior. So, women took the leadership roles. We have a delicate situation, so I wont make a recommendation."

Chief Red Cloud said was quoted as saying, "I could not make a decision, so the naca left the room and the grandmas made a decision for us. On treaty circle, there are no ladies serving there. She cannot sit on the circle, but be behind and be the spokesperson."

RST council representative, Russell Eagle Bear who has been very active in treaty council issues took the floor and said in Lakota, "I'm going to talk Lakota, but a lot do not talk Lakota here." At that, he switched to English and said, "We have been struggling without the treaty council. I served on the Black Hills treaty council and also the Black Hills steering committee, which sponsored a bill in congress. I was honored to be among old timers. We had our own Teton council of elders. They came together here in chambers. We had a good sounding board then. We are losing our elders."

"Our language is being lost too. We used to all talk Lakota here. It is important to talk Lakota. Words like compassion loses its meaning. We make a commitment at the Sturgis rally, and gave a statement on behalf of RST. We knew that it would happen. There were many people outside. I told them that we would help with any legal assistance. I knew Alex was coming here today. We need to help them any way we can. I am hoping that this body will go along with that commitment." said Eagle Bear.

Eagle Bear continued, "We need our wise elders up there and give guidance. I told Alex that maybe we are the wise elders. If there are any Oglala that ride Harleys, we will donate some hogs for you to ride… (laughter.) We need to organize Lakota people and stand up for their rights. Our grandfathers have been saying that since 1868."

White Plume took the floor again and said, "Mr. Chair, we scheduled a 60 day summit in July and August at Bear Butte…During the summit, Arvol will come down and explain the rituals. What was done, who conducted the rituals. The treaty council will say this is the only way to conduct ceremonies."

"We want to build a new consensus and life. You have the land and resources. There are ideal spots for camping. We want to rent that, water and electricity. Your land is mile and half from Jay Allen's land. We will Bring 500 hogs and by July the scent will go over to the biker bar." Said White Plume.

"There are over seven sun dances on Rosebud. Appropriate rituals need to be done. Is there any agreement so that all bands can use your land there? Oglala is donating buffalo. Expect 10,000 plus. A show of force. We need all leaders. It is time to build the great Sioux nation up. He kota wakpala, all bands gathered there and made new leaders. Need to re-utilize those lands. You have the ideal lands. The rally is for ten days and every day we want to walk downtown and tell them you are desecrating our land. We have a lot of support and we are going to hit Sturgis in the pocket." Concluded White Plume.

RST council representative Marion Young-One Star from Grass Mountain took the floor and said, "I am very cautious and I don't mean to be disrespectful. Especially when I talk to members of the treaty council. I didn't vote on the motion that we establish a treaty council. , I don't think we have that authority. I need some clarification, that we establish a treaty council. I don't feel comfortable doing that. The treaty council is established the way I see it. What it is supposed to be is a treaty office that offers support to our treaty council."

Fern Bordeaux-Boltz, Rosebud RST council representative took the floor and said, "Excuse me if I say anything wrong. I am cautious. I was honored to be at Bear Butte a couple of weeks ago. The Oglala support us as well as the Northern Cheyenne as they use our ceremonial grounds. I am over whelmed when we come to those gatherings. All tribes from all over the U.S. coming together in a spiritual way. The kids from various schools. The Northern Cheyenne council was there. There was only a handful of Rosebudders. The Oglala were trying to get us together for months. We could have made arrangements to take people up there. It was an honor to have the sacred pipe keeper that day."

Bordeaux-Boltz continued, "Lets get our people up there and stand together as a Sioux Nation. The little ones need to be a part of that. Bring that unity together. I have the deepest respect for the Oglala, as they were there in force. I encourage the people to listen to words spoke here today by our relatives the Ogalala. We need that."

Finally, Bordeaux-Boltz clarified her stance on women on the Sicangu treaty council when she said, "I want to apologize to the women out there. I didn't mean to make any attacks on women on the treaty council. I know the women are the voice behind the men. I know that. That is all I was trying to do…The grassroots people, they are going to have a meeting April 22-23, you grassroots people can still go up to those meetings. We need that representation for the Sicangu people. Call a meeting as soon as possible. Get the meeting going this weekend. While the governmental affairs is working on an ordinance."

Bordeaux-Boltz made a motion to authorize the utilization of Bear Butte lodge for the July 4th spiritual summit, which was passed by 14 yes votes and 4 not voting. RST President Bordeaux said he would have the RST attorney working on the agreement.

White Plume concluded their presentation by saying, "We cannot solve problems using the same language. Have to start talking Lakota. When talking about treaties, put your mind back 100 years. The grandpas used get in each other's face. It is a beautiful way. We need some strong-hearted people."

Remina Rae Eagle Elk

KEARNEY, Neb. - Remina Rae Eagle Elk, the second daughter of Edward, and Nida Coleman-Eagle Elk (deceased) of Grass Mt., South Dakota, died Jan. 29 at Good Samaritan Hospital in Kearney, Nebraska, the result of a massive stroke. Wake services were at Upper Cut Meat Community Hall on Feb. 2 and 3. She was laid to rest Saturday, Feb. 4, beside her Mother at Star Cemetery south of St. Francis. Remina, called "Mina" by family and friends, was born and raised in the Grass Mountain, Spring Creek area on Rosebud. She graduated from St. Francis Indian School in 1979. Remina moved to Sioux City, Iowa in 1982 and was employed at the American Indian Center there for four years. She had four children with her first husband, Scott Barta of Nakota Hills. Remina named her children with only Lakota names (without "last" names or "sir" names like non-Indigenous people do). Her oldest son, Cetan Cikala or "Little Hawk," is currently assisting his peers and counsel at Penn State. Remina's eldest daughter, Kimimila Waci Win or "Dancing Butterfly Woman," was named after groups of small yellow butterflies that were attracted to Remina during the Greenwood Sun Dance in 1985 on the Yankton Sioux Reservation. Kimimila attended the University of Iowa prior to bearing Remina's first grandson, "Clyde," late in 2005, and is currently employed providing care to animals and pets in Sioux City, Iowa. Remina's youngest son, Inyan or "Rock," is a world champion Indigenous "Men's" Traditional Pow-Wow dancer and currently resides in Clarinda, Iowa. Remina attended nurse's training in Tulsa, Oklahoma in 1991 and 1992. She is survived by her father, Ed, of Porcupine, South Dakota, and her three children (her second daughter, Mni Un Nipi Win [named by her aunt Gina] passed away in 1987). Also by her husband, Kenneth Voss, of Long Pine, Nebraska, with whom Remina gathered "bee honey" from Kenneth's box hives ranging from South Dakota to Texas each year during the honey harvest times. Remina worked with Kenneth moving irrigation pivot systems on a seasonal basis. Her surviving siblings include Leo, Roger, Gina, Beegee, Rick, Wendy and Eddy. Remina had a very special talent of giving to others. Her heart was as big as they get. She always seemed to say the right thing to cheer a person up or to lift their spirit when needed the most. She valued her friends dearly and would leave unique little gifts with them on her travels from South Dakota to Texas and Louisiana.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have a month year old and I was wanting to know if I and the father will get along soon. Or should I give up? Life is getting hard for me and I wish the father was more understanding and caring. Does he regret us? Does he love me and the baby? How's the future going to be for me and baby? Will the father come back? If so, when? Why is his girlfriend more important? Should I leave him and let him be?

Lonely and depressed

Dear Lonely and depressed:

This is going to be hard for you to read. Just because a man has a child with a woman it does not make her automatically the love of his life. Your baby's father really isn't that interested in creating a committed relationship with you - but he is interested in forming a relationship (of sorts) with the baby as the baby gets older. This child, in effect, is your child.

This baby is not going to create or help create a relationship with a man that loves another woman. Do not despair, however, it is never good to be with a mate that doesn't love you enough to want to dedicate his life to your welfare and to a partnership - and this man just plain doesn't love you enough. Don't take it personally (I can hear everybody laugh at this line), but it was for casual sex that you chose this man, and essentially, that is all that you got from him, in terms of a commitment.

Remember, the Creator has blessed you with this life, to keep, to honor, to cherish and to raise. In this instance the man is just a sperm donor. There is a man coming for you, but you must not try and trap him with sex or by being different than you really are. It is not regretful to raise a child independently, just a little more difficult.

A child in a household of discontented parents is not as well off as a child with one loving strong parent. Center of healing yourself and creating a life for yourself and your child and lay off the preoccupation with men for a while.

You are young, and to find the "right" guy is a journey, not a destination.

Blessings to you young mom.

Dear Anna,

I came across your column on the web and am not a subscriber but from South Dakota and born in Martin.

My question is what is in store for me in the next two years? I am married with three kids and going to school.

Will our finances improve? What is my job prospect outlook like? Have a good life.

Just asking

Dear Just asking,

Your job prospects look really good in the first part of September. It looks as though you will be combining your education time with employment time and that will result in a less hectic schedule with a little more money.

Your husband seems to be in a small slump right now, but I do see a lot of improvement for him. I see him doing a combination of working on/with cars and the retrieval and organizing of information (electronic systems?).

You are doing so well right now in taking care of your future that I hope you are proud of your accomplishments and your tenacity. Good things will happen in your life. You really try hard to be a good mom and create a good life so those things will happen.

Dear Anna,

I am in my 60s and live off the reservation. Last year our tool shed in the back yard caught fire in the wee hours of the morning. The fire department came too late and the shed burned to the ground.

The fire chief said it was electrical, although no electricity was connected to the building. A few weeks later, another shed burned to the ground north of us. This building belongs to a non Indian so this changed everything. It was determined the two fires were set by an arsonist. Nothing was ever done about it.

Lately someone has been taking pot shots at my classic car parked in the back yard. The back window has pellet or BB holes in it. My other car parked on the south side of the house also received some windshield damage.

The police chief came and surveyed the damage, but couldn't find any evidence. I was told the keep an eye out for any suspicious behavior in our area. My question is, is this the same person who set the fires that is doing this. I have an intuitive feeling of who it is, but I don't like to point fingers at anyone. Will this continue and will someone get caught, or is the house next?

Just wondering

Dear Just wondering:

The arsonist and the bee bee gun kid have two different perpetrators. You are correct in your intuitive identification of the idiot child with the bee bee gun - apprently this young man has no respect for the law, his parents, or the cost of repairing someone's property. He will be caught in the summer time during another incident at a neighbors home (blue-gray colored house).

The arsonist is a sick puppy. This is a young man that wets the bed and has a very sneaky ill side. He is about 12 to 14 years old and has wide-set eyes. He looks a little "shifty" and has "wet lips" or a spit swallowing problem, and instinctively you don't care for him. I am sorry that the law doesn't pay attention until a white person gets hit, but have faith that time is changing that attitude. What we pray for is that someday the color of skin is not noticed, anymore than clothing, because that is all that it is.

The world is a rough place, so protection through prayer is your best route. If it is within your belief system, a red tobacco flag at each of the corners of your property may help, or consult with an interpreter and he may recommend four colors coinciding with his alter.

A dog will help, but is in danger of being shot with a pellet too, so he would have to be a dog that is inside at night. I have a funny routine that you may use to discourage such behavior:

Start a rumor that you have hidden camera's all over your property that are hooked into police headquarters. It may keep more people away than you know.

Dear Anna,

I have been dating a really nice guy for more than five years. We get along really well and have fun together.

We don't talk too often about our future as it doesn't seem a big deal right now as we just enjoy what we have. Lately I find myself getting a little concerned about my future. Do you see us together in a more permanent relationship?

Just a question

Dear "Justa",

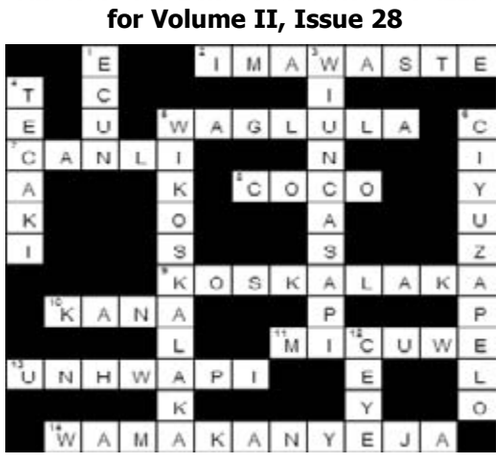
This relationship is based on friendship - and that is a good start. The denial by both of you when you are together of any future at all is humorous.

He is afraid that he will scare you off - and your main reason for silence is that you also believe that if you say anything you will scare him away.

The interesting thing is, you are likely to meet another man sometime within the next six month, who will sweep you off from your feet, and then have to tell your longtime friend goodbye.

Hmmmm - you say you want it to be him? Well, take a closer look at who he really is before you decide that. He likes freedom. He is not likely to spend any more time with you in the future than he does now. He likes it fine the way it is.

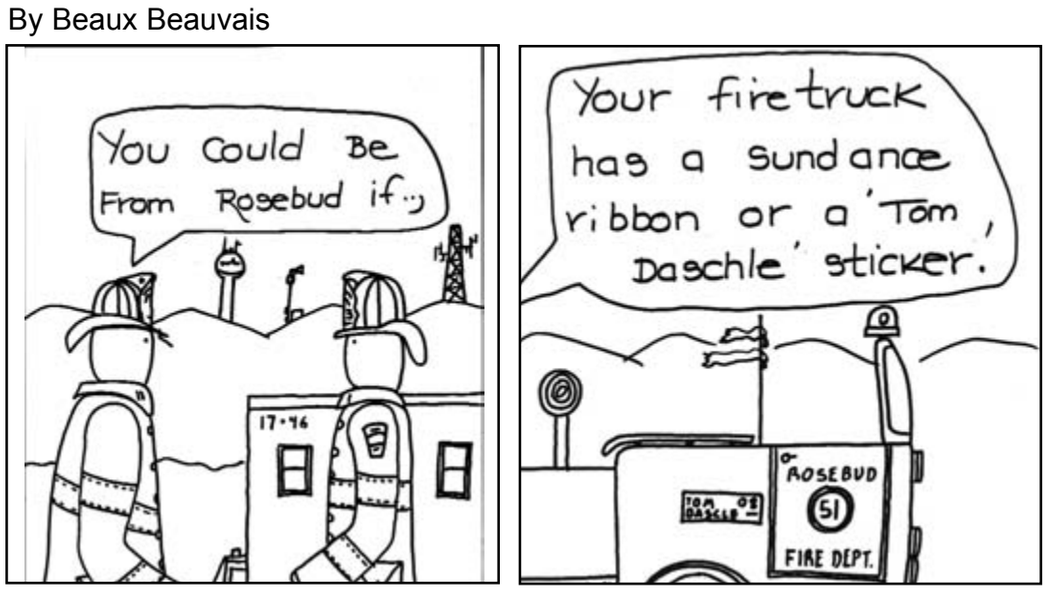
Dear Readers,



After a large response to my Bear Butte letter, I have one request for all of you:

Please write letters to all of the major newspapers in this country: The New York Times, The Chicago Tribune, The Seattle Post Intelligencer, the Oregonian, the Denver Post, the San Francisco Chronicle...etc. Email Dr. Phil, Oprah - do your stuff - talk, write!

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests maybe subject to publication.



Clearly mark Ask Anna on your request. This column is meant for entertainment purposes only. The Lakota Country Times owners and employees have no liability regarding the answers provided.

4. No one goes to church for the wedding, but everyone goes to the reception.
5. All the centerpieces and balloons are gone... and the reception has just started.
6. Everyone's kids are running around like crazy and all you want to do is throw a bottle at them.
7. Meal includes beans and fry bread.
8. People are taking food plates home... "for those backward Indians that didn't come"
9. People are taking huge pieces of cake home
10. One of the relatives is drunk and trying to start a fight with the new in-laws.
11. There are STILL people partying at the reception the next morning, even though the band has left.
12. Not sure what to get the bride and groom; they've been shacked up for a while and already have everything!
13. Tribal police will drive-by at least a dozen times.

Happy 39th Birthday
Rebecca Ann Apple-Three Stars

Our mother/grandmother Becky is special.
She's as soft and graceful as a butterfly, yet as strong and courageous as a grizzly bear.
Her heart is large enough to hold everyone's pain and joy. Her hands are always gentle and soothing.
Her arms are always warm and tender.
She works hard to make a home feel like home, and she strives to make life pleasant and comfortable for those she loves.
She never fails to go that extra mile to make the holidays happy and memorable.
Her job is the most difficult and demanding ever known to any human being, yet she's fully dedicated to the task. She's always there for her family, guiding them and keeping them safe from harm.
She owns a magical way to raise spirits and make everything feel better.
And her sympathy, unselfishness and forgiveness are unending.
All that anyone is or could ever hope to be can be attributed to a mother.She instills the teachings that will last a lifetime.
She sows the seeds of virtue and morality, and in the process, she opens up love and vast horizons.
She's always watching and hoping that her children's/grandchildren's goals will have meaning.
She always listens and tries to understand even when it's difficult to do so.She's a true friend in every sense of the word.
She's noble and sublime, and holds all the beauty of a golden day, yet even during the storms, she always shines bright like an evening star. Your name should be honored well, for your the closest thing to God on earth.
We love you and pray all your wishes, goals, and dreams come true! We are proud of you Mom!

Love,
Eltina, Cheryl, Elton jr, Laynee Bug, Pierce and Payton

Air ambulance initiative proposed for reservations

SIOUX FALLS - The PASSNet company, and Tex Hall, chairman of the Intertribal Economic Alliance along with regional tribal leaders will be holding a press conference at the Ramkota Hotel on April 26 at 2:30 p.m. in Sioux Falls.

The purpose is to announce PASSNet's plan to do business as Cetan Air Ambulance on the northern plains by utilizing a remote rural based air ambulance service to the Indian trauma patients in the Great Plains region.

The advantage of basing air ambulances in rural communities has patient care benefits that include; transport time cut in half, an air ambulance can be dedicated to a single reservation if justified, it enhances patient continuity of care, and it enhances flight options when inclement weather conditions impact patient safety.

John J. Warnock, CEO and president of PASSNET, Inc. in a press release wrote, "In Cetan Air Ambulance's service model, that patient could instead be transported from the scene and/or rural emergency room directly to our aircraft at the rural air station.

Given that Cetan Air Ambulance's fixed-wing aircraft are substantially faster in flight than most helicopters, door-to-door patient transport time is less-even with the addition of ground ambulance transport from the destination airport to the regional trauma center."

KILI Radio off air
$50,000 needed for antenna

PORCUPINE - "We had a brief rain storm roll through the area with some thunder and lightening," said Mary White Face, KILI Radio's Saturday morning country DJ, "it sounded like some lightening hit close by and we were knocked off the air for about 20 minutes. When we got back on the air, we could only get up with low power."

The brief storm hit Saturday, April 15 and for the rest of the week, KILI could only manage one to two percent power, any higher and it would shut down, Buzi Two Lance, KILI's program director related. Listeners in Oglala, Pine Ridge, Kyle and Wanblee experienced difficulties in getting a decent signal from the Pine Ridge Reservation based station.

"Our engineer made it down from Rapid City on Saturday and gave us the news, KILI's ten bay antenna high up on the station's 300 foot tower at Porcupine Butte has a portion burned, the carbon from the burn causes arcing when too much power is run through it," said Melanie Janis, station manager, "we knew a year ago that we were going to have to replace our antenna, OSHA has determined that the model of antenna we have gives off too much RF with the sta-

Sen. Johnson hears cries of needed economy
'$200 million enters Oglala Nation, $180 million immediately leaves'

BY TOM KATUS

RAPID CITY - Senator Tim Johnson held a listening session for South Dakota's tribal leaders on April 21. He outlined his new Hometown Prosperity Plan, which has four pillars: promoting partnerships, emphasizing entrepreneurship, investing in the public good and protecting pocketbooks. "We want to have real meaningful consultation. My concern is not that we tell tribes what they should do but that we get guidance from our tribal leaders," he stated. Five tribal chairpersons and other Native American leaders provided their views on economic development and other pressing issues.

Youth rally on loss of YO!

AMANDA TAKES WAR BONNETT

PINE RIDGE - An off again, on again youth rally Friday at Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge brought youth workers, YO staff, community members and KILI Radio together to hear about the status of the Youth Opportunity program on Pine Ridge reservation.

"YO has over 3,400 youth enrolled across the reservation," said Oi Zephier, youth mentor, "for the past five and a half years the program has been providing a great service to our future leaders, future parents, up and coming workforce and new voters and most of all has provided a positive place for our youth to spend after school time. The United Lakota Youth Rally was set up to bring people together look for ideas and strategies to keep the program going and continue the valuable services to our youth."

tion so close to the tower, we knew we either had to move the building or get a different antenna - the burn damage just makes the situation more immediate."

KILI's engineer was able to get the power up to four and a half per cent on Saturday but by Sunday morning the power was below one percent and the station was off the air.

"Bob Brave Heart, Red Cloud school's superintendent called on Monday wanting to get an important message out about early school dismissal, several other reservation schools called to get storm related information out," said Janis, "and all day long loyal listeners called to find out what was happening to their station."

According to an early rough estimate, the station is going to need as much as $50,000 to replace the antenna and transmission line and to have it installed. A new antenna could cost about $25,000 the new line about $12,000 and the installation about $13,000.

"No we do not have that kind of money stashed away for a rainy day," said Janis, "we have talked to representatives from the Corporation from Public Broadcasting about emergency funds to help us get back on the air, there is a possibility of maybe some Public Telecommunications Facilities Program (PTFP) money and if no emergency resources are available we are talking with the Empowerment Zone about a ten year loan. Although many of our listeners have expressed concern about not being able to tune into their local community radio station, no one has stepped forward to donate assistance. We have been working with an Italian radio network, Malvisi, that is donating equipment for our studio and volunteering to travel here from Europe to install it; they are now looking for corporate sponsors who might help KILI in their latest time of need."

KILI's antenna is the original antenna installed back in late 1982. It has been taken down more than once to be cleaned, repaired and rebuilt in some places according to Two Lance. Every FM station has to deal with the fact that their transmission line is out in the open, a large coaxial cable that runs from the transmitter up the tower to the antenna, it is out in the open, in the wind, rain, sleet, snow, hail and hot sun. Over the 23 years on the air, KILI has made a number of splices, replaced some or all of the transmission lines and repaired a number of breaks in the line.

"We need to raise the money and then get the necessary equipment ordered and line up a tower crew to install everything," said Janis, "how long will all of that take, it won't be a day or two, maybe not a week or two, maybe even a month - we will continue to broadcast over the Internet at kili-radio.org while we work at getting back on the air."

When we go down, so many people come to realize that KILI is an important part of their daily life and they have tended to take the station for granted," said Dennis White Shield, board chair, "whenever we go down, people realize they are missing an important part of their life, after we go back on they tend to forget just as quickly that we need their regular support to continue broadcasting each day."

Man in escape investigation held in tribal jail

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) _ A man who walked away from police custody in Burleigh County earlier this year is now jailed on the Standing Rock Sioux Indian Reservation.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs said Jacob White Eagle is in custody in Fort Yates. The agency did not release the charges pending there.

White Eagle was arrested at a Bismarck hospital on Feb. 15 on a revocation warrant. He had been charged with criminal trespass, criminal mischief and driving under suspension.

He was later taken back to the hospital for treatment of an infected arm. Authorities said deputies left after being told White Eagle would be admitted, and he then fled.

The Burleigh County Sheriff's Department did not report the incident until seven weeks later.

Sheriff Steve Berg said some policies in his department have been changed because of the incident.

tract health services. The Oglala Sioux Tribe was allocated $7 million for such services in FY 2006. "While we are only two-thirds through the fiscal year, we have already spent $6 million. Now, Jomay and the rest of the press, this is what I want you to understand. Virtually all that $6 million has been spent at Rapid City Regional Hospital for helicopter and fixed wing ambulance service and emergency and intensive care."

In addition to President Fire Thunder, the tribal leaders who participated included: Michael Jandreau, chairman of Lower Brule Sioux Tribe; Rodney Bordeaux, president of Rosebud Sioux Tribe; Harold Frazier, chairman of Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe and Robert Cournoyer, chairman of Yankton Sioux Tribe.

A major theme brought up by the tribal leaders was that poor infrastructure stymies business development. Michael Jandreau said, "I just got a copy of your Hometown Prosperity Plan. I will review it and make suggestions. I am pleased that it is a comprehensive package addressing overall economic development. Our primary need is resources, especially for law enforcement, health and education."

Harold Frazier emphasized that poor infrastructure increases the startup costs of small businesses. He also indicated that CRST has long had a unified business code to help attract investors. Few have come. One of the biggest mistakes in the past was that the BIA small business grant program was cut in the 1990s. "This program that provided grants to entrepreneurs was very valuable. A study done in the 1990s by Robert McLaughlin, SRST, indicated that in the Aberdeen Area, the grant program had an 88 percent success rate," stated Frazier. BIA subsequently used the last remaining grant money to set up the Tribal Business Information Centers. Frazier continued, "The existing BIA loan guarantee is under-utilized. Last year, the Aberdeen Area office spent only $30 million of $90 million that was available. There are four banks on the Cheyenne River Reservation, but it is very difficult for any tribal member to secure a $100,000 small business loan. BIA continuously throws up bureaucratic red tape. Every time we turn around, we have to jump through another hoop." Frazier concluded, "More than $100 million comes into the reservation, but most goes right back out to the surrounding towns like Mobridge and Pierre. We need to get a Shopko or Alco established to help serve our people's needs."

Rodney Bordeaux continued the theme. "Last year, more than $185 million came through the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, but 80 percent leaves the reservation. We are trying to establish a tribally owned grocery store. We have two private stores on the reservation. One of them, Buches, had $7 million in revenue last year, but they are based in Norfolk, Neb. and don't reinvest in the reservation."

Fire Thunder said, "The Oglala Sioux Tribe receives more than $200 million, but $180 million of that almost immediately leaves the reservation for Rapid City and the surrounding towns. How can we keep more of it on Pine Ridge?" she asked. Senator Johnson responded, "Not only do we need to keep federal funds on the reservations, we need to encourage businesses to keep those funds circulating."

Fire Thunder continued, "The Mni Wiconi Project is only 30 percent complete. We don't want additional funding for any of the other water projects funded until Mni Wiconi is completed." She concluded, "The western models of economic development don't work. They are square. Indian Country is round. It is very difficult to pound a square into a circle that doesn't fit. Maybe we need an oblong model."

Robert Cournoyer identified factors that could enhance reservation economies. He said, "We need stability in tribal government, including four-year terms, financial accountability and longterm leases to collateralize loans."

Ivan Sorbel, executive director, Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce, commented, "We are the only Indian Chamber in the U.S. based on a reservation. Last year, a tribal entrepreneur opened the first motel on the reservation in more than 50 years. However, he had to install a septic tank. To receive rural water, he had to attend 13 separate meetings. We do have a Pizza Hut on Pine Ridge and last year, it was number one in demand throughout the entire region. Despite the desire of our tribal entrepreneurs, last year, SBA provided zero loan guarantees on Pine Ridge and Rosebud."

Lyle Jack, councilman and chairman of the OST Economic Development Committee, used the example of the Pine Ridge village waste water system. "When we first started planning for this system years ago, we were using 250,000 gallons of water annually. Because we anticipated growth, we had designed the system for 500,000 gallons. Now, however, our usage is already up to 400,000 gallons, and the system is not even up and running."

Senator Johnson briefed the leaders on the Native American Small Business Act, which he sponsored last year. It passed the Senate and the House but was lost in the final budget shuffle. "I know it's frustrating, and I have reintroduced it again this year. Hopefully, we can get the House and Senate to come to agreement earlier in the budget cycle. The Act will enable SBA to provide pilot projects to the tribes and develop a Native American Small Business Development Center." Chairman Bordeaux applauded Johnson's efforts and indicated that maybe such a center could be located in Rapid City, as it would be close to the four largest tribes in the state.

Pete Sheldon, president of Native American Office Products in Rapid City and a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, remarked that he contracts for office supplies all over the country and can't get IHS to enforce the "buy-Indian" act. "They say they buy exclusively from Staples at cost. I asked them why they have a 'buy-Indian' act if they're not going to use it. I am convinced there is an opportunity in Native American Office Products that can be competitive with Staples." Sheldon stated, "I've been contracting with the government since 1965. Last year, we were rated the second-best minority vendor in the United States. I've talked to Qusi [Al-Haj], Thune's boy here in Rapid City, and nothing has happened." Sheldon continued, "I have tried to do what I can to establish outlets on the reservations. I have had them in both Pine Ridge and Rosebud but can't find the help and people who will show up for work. When I phone the Contracts Office at Ellsworth Air Force Base, no one even returns my calls."

Clarence Skye, executive director, United Sioux Tribes, stated, "We really appreciate your efforts, Senator Johnson, as we did Senator Daschle's previously. If Senator Daschle becomes President, he can appoint you Secretary of Interior, and then Indian Country will really benefit." Johnson jokingly responded, "I believe the possibilities of that happening are quite remote. Meanwhile, I do sit on the Appropriations Committee. While the Administration is threatening to terminate 91 Indian programs, we will do everything we can to restore them.

And we will probably have some success. However, even when we get programs restored, they are usually restored at lower levels than the needs. With this process of the White House continuously terminating programs and Congress restoring, we don't even keep abreast of inflation."

Johnson concluded the session by saying, "We are told that times are tight. We don't have the money. That's not true. We have plenty of money. It is a question of priorities. The tax cuts for individuals making over $1 million a year totals $42 billion. Donald Trump has won the tax breaks war."

Sicangu Wicoti Awanyakapi reports to RST tribal council

Moore threatens to suspend housing charter

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - During a SWA housing presentation aired over KINI radio by housing Executive Director Amos Prue to the RST tribal council on April 18 a number of issues were discussed having to do with the eviction notice served on a quadriplegic veteran, black mold, and temporary emergency housing for a family whose house was burned down recently.

Antelope council representative Robert Moore threatened to suspend the SWA charter, however there was no quorum toward the end of the day, because of the troubling issues facing housing, such as delinquencies, black mold, evictions, etc.

Rosebud council representative Fern Bordeaux-Boltz explained that a community member who is a veteran and quadriplegic had been served with an eviction notice from SWA. She noted that she was opposed to such conduct by the housing authority. She said, "I hold up veterans. He is someone who I call upon for advice about tribal affairs."

Bordeaux-Boltz also described a family that was seeking temporary housing for two female tribal members whose house had burned down recently. SWA housing had refused to grant their request for temporary housing. Bordeaux-Boltz said that the RST tribal council had directed SWA to assign the family last week, however as a chartered entity the motion apparently had no effect.

Prue then noted that there are policies, regulations, and confidentially issues and a grievance process that people must follow. If an issue is decided against someone, they have due process and are given a packet, which spells out their rights and the next step in the process toward seeking relief.

RST council representative Russell Eagle Bear spoke of the VA homeless shelter next to the fairground.

He said, "There is a project between the tribe and SWA. The log building is complete, the outer structure. There is an MOA between the tribe and you all. We need to do our part and go in and do the finish work and eliminate the homeless issue. We need to get active and hold up our end of the bargain in terms of the homeless log building."

Eagle Bear also said that when coming through Pine Ridge he noticed that their housing authority makes an effort to air delinquencies and housing business and that is something that could be done locally on the Rosebud through the media.

Prue took the floor and said, "There are a lot of things you brought up. We are going to have to go back and sit down. The board has heard a lot of things here and will want to know the same things on the 20th. The staff will meet directly with the board. The issue that Fern brought up, I can't go into detail. I wish this body could identify a work group so that it has the authority to review the individual you are talking about. We have our side of the story. I am not here to challenge. We may not agree with what you say. We cannot respond because they are confidential matters. Some group should come up and be identified and have access to certain files and draw your own conclusion and come up with a recommendation to remedy some of these things. I don't think we are too callous.

If there is a personnel issue, come up and discuss it with the board and not here."

Antelope council representative Robert Moore took the floor and said, "This issue may be pertinent for health care. We took a bold step last week in declaring a state of emergency."

"Also a class action suit against I.H.S for every member of the RST. Every issue of housing goes beyond housing and Amos. Because issues are so complex. There are programs for this and this and policies for this and that. I was going to suspend the charter of SWA, but there is no quorum," he said.

Moore continued, "I'm sorry there is not 15 people here to make that motion. I can guarantee Fern that we will look at all chartered entities. They have taken on a life of their own. The U.S. Government recognizes us as the voice of the Sicangu Nation. It is not SWA. We want to employ people to fix their own homes. We requested SWA to work more closely with Antelope and make our lists more symbiotic. I will make the motion next meeting to suspend the charter of SWA."

Chairman of the SWA board. Phyllis White Shield took the floor and noted that CEO Amos Prue has done a tremendous job since coming on board in 2002. With respect to the fact that SWA must comply with policy, she said, "It is really important to understand the outline and critique of NAHASDA. We have to be fair to the people in our housing, which requires a waiting list.

It is a federal law. They are saying that as a housing authority and chartered under RST every program we develop has to have policy and procedure.

The board is a policy making board for the well being of the people. We are bound to those federal regulations. HUD is still involved in our processes and will tell us if we are not complying with federal regulations. Amos. when he came on helped to put us back on compliance. I want to commend the board and staff for their hard work. Elders remind us to practice 'Wolakota'. Sometimes with those federal regulations, it is hard to tell them that we cannot do that."

White Shield asked the council to visit with the SWA staff. She said, "We hope that the charter will not be pulled. Would like to see alternative ways to see how we can work together. If we are talking collaboration, that is not the answer."

Prue again took the floor and told his staff "I'm the one up here catching hell. To you out there listening who work at SWA listen to what is being discussed here as I am not going to say it again… We came with information just as we would at a public forum. We worked on a plan to incorporate a lot what you said in our plan. When we get together as a staff, they will refresh my memory and meet on what you are requesting."

Mills Hall on Friday for a rally against tribal government.

"Many people went away from a meeting on Thursday with the idea that the rally was postponed or cancelled," said Maretta Champaign, an employee of YO, "some councilman who had planned to come made alternative plans; it was the youth though who really wanted to continue to have the rally- many of them with the help of some parents prepared the meal for all those who came on Friday."

A number of questions and issues were brought to the floor on Friday after the meeting was opened with both a prayer and songs by youth from Kyle.

What happened to the money left in the YO budget or account, can the tribe donate the indirect costs needed to manage the federal monies used to fund the YO program over the last five and a half years, obviously most administrators with the tribe and YO knew the federal resources were finite, why didn't anyone look ahead and develop alternative sources of funding to keep a valuable youth program going and doesn't our tribal leaders or anyone else really care about the youth today were all brought up during the meeting.

Jeremy Jones, a youth worker who was one of 200 youth workers laid off on April 14 was the MC for the rally and helped to keep a steady flow of speakers coming to the mic to share their thoughts about the YO program and the concerns they had about the future.

Jones spoke on many issues concerning youth and the community. He said the youth were there at the rally to try to do something constructive.

He said money is a big problem in the communities.

"We need to find more opportunities for the youth, not just for Youth Opportunity, but for opportunities for the youth," he said.

"Basically, we need an economic turnout," he added.

He spoke of adults and how they need to be more of a role models for youth in the communities.

For example, he said it is well known there are people who work for tribal institutions and they would attend workshops and conferences and would get their motels and expenses paid and in reality they don't go to learn and use that knowledge but "have an all expense paid vacation."

"When you do this, you show your students it is okay to cheat," he said.

Vanessa Araphoe, an enrolled member of the YO program told those in attendance the program made a difference in her life.

"I was into alcohol and YO helped me, it opened up my life. I am active in YO and I haven't been active in much," she said.

Another young woman said the program participates and the center felt like her family, they support each other.

Hawk Eye Montileaux, who sang with two others the opening song, emphasized to those in attendance and to those listening on the radio, that an active effort has to be made to find funding for youth.

He urged the students in attendance, " You are smart, we can do it, we can look for monies... we can use the computers, use the Internet, look for grants and fundings," he said.

Ask the bigger, more wealthy tribes... ask Shakopee, they are rich, instead of blaming people for stealing money" he said.

Al White Calf, Joe Mesteth and Meagan Little Hawk all spoke from the heart while Francine Big Crow and other parents and grandparents spoke passionately about how important YO has been to their children and grandchildren by providing a safe and positive place to grow and learn away from the rough and tumble streets of the community with their strong influences of drugs, alcohol and gangs.

Garfield Steele, tribal council representative from Wounded Knee District was the lone elected official in attendance. Cora Whiting attended, representing Cecelia Fire Thunder, tribal president and disseminated a printout of the history of YO revenues and expenditures over the five and a half years of the YO program.

"We need to support our youth," said Steele who serves as the chair of the council's judiciary committee, "we can and need to find the resources to keep this program, it is just a valuable program for our youth and we need to back up all the promises we make to our youth, now is the time for action not more talk."

Originally, YO was a five year grant, but there were carryover funds that were not spent and YO was allowed to continue for a sixth year. Whiting distributed a breakdown of the revenue and expenditures, almost $16 million was broken down to $5.3 million on salaries, $1.7 million on operating expenses, $6.5 million on direct services to youth, $1.6 million on indirect costs and $225,000 on the Sue Anne Center.

"We are actually meeting today, right now and we are working on a plan," said Cora Whiting, "all of us want to put together a workable plan on the future of any youth programs on the reservation; Jeremy Jones and other past youth workers and involved youth are forming a youth council, there will be an election this weekend and they are working on a plan that could be implemented by July 1st. Doni DeCory is working on a closeout plan for the program from now until June 30, there is about $141,000 to decide on how to close out the program and with what staff."

There are still 35 core staff and nine district YO centers around the reservation, did their jobs end on April 14? Do they end on June 30?

At the present time how much money is really left in the program to close it out? What were the successes of the six year program, what should continue and where will the resources come from to continue it and who should make these decisions?

In addition to the district centers and all of the youth, youth workers and staff involved with the program, YO has a stake in the upcoming North American Indigenous Games scheduled for July 2-9 in Denver, Co. where 500 youth will participate in competition as part of Team South Dakota.

"Over these past six years, we have touched so many youth, we have such a young population today and their needs will continue to grow as their numbers grow," said Champaigne, "we can't drop the ball on this, the future of our nation is on the line."

Where is the answer to a better infrastructure in Indian country?

Last Friday, Sen. Tim Johnson met with tribal leaders to discuss his outlined Hometown Prosperity Plan, which promotes economic development and budget concerns. He was there to listen to the concerns of the Indian country regarding those issues. Tom Katus, one of our correspondents wrote an article regarding facts and figures that tribal leaders shared. Some of the facts revealed are not surprising as we know what goes on in Indian country, however it takes seeing those figure in black and white to realize the impact of what it means to our homeland.

For example, President Fire Thunder states that for fiscal year 2006, Indian Health Service contract health has a budget of $7 million and now, in two-thirds of the fiscal year, they have already spent $6 million. She emphasized how that money is virtually all spent at the Rapid City Regional Hospital.

It was partly to emphasize the fact that millions of dollars come into Indian country but hardly any of it stays here. The Oglala Sioux Tribe receives more than $200 million and $180 million of that immediately leaves the reservation.

Rosebud's figures are all too similar just as in the rest of Indian country.

One estimate is that Rosebud turns over $100 million a year in payroll, grant funding, and other entitlements, however most of it does not stay on the Rosebud.

What that means is the money comes to the reservation and comes through our treasury channels through payroll, related expenditures and vendors and immediately goes back out across the borders to Rapid City and our border towns.

Poor infrastructure is another key that increases the startup of new business.

We see it on the reservations, from the business codes to law enforcement to having good water systems to the work force.

The work force alone is a major issue. Dr. Kathleen Pickering of Colorado State University made some great strides in that issue with her grassroots surveys and study. It is almost better to be on social programs than work because once you figure it all out, it comes out about the same. If one works to get to a certain wage level, then they eventually lose their other benefits like food stamps, Medicaid, WIC, commodities and other family resources. So the answer… stick to the lower pay and the family will be better off in getting the other resources.

Another part of that infrastructure is the work force. We have a work force but getting the skilled work force is another issue. Every employer on the reservation deals with getting good help. As one business owner said, we have good workers, getting them to the job on a regular basis is the problem. He said we have a problem with addictions it keeps them from going to work.

It's a problem and every institution on the reservation deals with it. The Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce has already presented to the public that we need separation of powers and a Uniform Commercial Code.

The UCC is a formal document drafted by several entities which spells out the rights and processes for doing business on the reservation.

Many tribes actually have a version of this code, however in its present form it does not do enough to protect businesses and individuals who seek to transact business with one another and have their interests protected by the courts.

Businesses from the outside need assurances that they can initiate collection activity against a tribal member if needed. The bottom line is that both consumer and entrepreneur need their rights protected and the UCC is the instrument to do that.

Separation of powers is much needed in Indian Country as many tribal courts operate at the direction of their tribal councils. Thus, they do not operate independent of that oversight and they need to. This was a recommendation from a Harvard University study.

So what is the answer… our leadership? Our families? Our communities? Or within ourselves?

Why not create a law that supports life?

Dear Editor:

Even though my family has been here in California for a few years, we still hear all the news from back home in South Dakota. What has caught my attention most recently has been the progress of the OST (Oglala Sioux Tribal) President. Congratulations to Cecelia Fire Thunder in regard to her various accomplishments and most especially transferring her Tribe's debt to an Indian entity.

I am deeply disappointed over the issue under her consideration for the provision of an abortion clinic on the Oglala land and would remind her of our Lakota identity. Whilst we are moving forward through time and progress, some things remain the same. Our People, as many know, have always revered life as sacred. Even if a life is conceived in some manner other than through loving parents (as in the cases of rape and incest), the result is a human being who is not responsible for the actions that caused her or his conception. Why in the world does it make any sense to kill this human life that could or would have been the only good tangible thing to come out of a horrendous act?

I am concerned that, as our people get educated (such as President Fire Thunder and others), we not buy into the larger society (American) attitude that involves the devaluing and destruction of human life, from its earliest existence in the sacred wombs of our women, to the honored elderly, some neglected, in places alone. The peace and joy that comes from someone coming in to visit, to hug or rub the back of an aged person is immeasurable.

In taking a good hard look at our Lakota Culture, we have always been proponents of life. Everything, all the practices, food (traditional, before fry bread), clothing, lifestyle, etc., was all done to support, preserve and to protect human life. Even our enemies enjoyed the privilege of keeping their lives through our "counting coup" strategy.

Even our enemies, for the most part, had their own lives preserved and President Fire Thunder would honor a woman who chooses to end the life in her womb? The innocent life who didn't ask to be conceived in whatever circumstances?

So Cecelia, I beg you on behalf of the unborn, on behalf of our People and most especially, the spirits of our ancestors, do not assert Tribal sovereignty rights to the destruction of human life. Why not assert the rights in a positive direction? I always felt this positive encouragement from you at our every conversation.

If the Oglala or Sicangu or any of our sovereign tribes want to really show resistance to the "powers that be" why not support a law on Tribal land banning abortions and euthanasia. Why not be a champion for the voice of those who are unable to speak for themselves or who are ignored and unappreciated? Why not create a law that supports human life? This law, my dear People, would aim at a higher court than the State of South Dakota. This law to support and protect human life would strike at the highest court of the wasicu in this land, the Supreme Court.

There is much more one could say about our roles as advocates for life in our Lakota Society. About the dignity and respect, honor and generosity of a people who still have the potential to live out this way of life and to be an example to the larger society.

Being a leader is a difficult task. One cannot please everyone but one can go down in history as a benevolent person who has built up a people, going against the mainstream in a society bent on destroying human life -- or as a leader who aimed his or her efforts towards the destruction of a people, even their own.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Teaching our children about loss

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

This past week, I experienced seeing youth accept loss or trying to accept loss and attempting to understand their emotions around that loss.

Last Friday, there was a youth rally at the Billy Mills hall and in attendance were an estimated 80 to 100 youth. They were there to be together in an united rally setting, more to voice their concerns about the ending of a five year youth program that made an impact in their lives.

The Youth Opportunity program, which was a five year program from grant monies from the Department of Labor, ended this month due to no money.

The program was scheduled to end sooner last year but got a reprieve due to some unspent carry over monies from the tribe. It has been a great program and has impacted the lives of many youth and their families.

At the rally, youth got up one after another and voiced their concerns and their loss. There were tears and emotions and genuine concern over what happened to their program. These children invited their leadership to the rally to hear their concerns and only one councilman showed up and a representative from the president's office. It was sad to hear what these children said. Someone should have prepared them for the upcoming loss. Most of them understood why their program ended. It was the expectations of what they see in their future that concerned them. Whether it was the program itself or their families or the tribe or their community leaders, our kids need encouragement and support.

This past weekend was the Black Hills State University 24th Annual Lakota Omniciye Wacipi and we attended because we have three grand children who are pow wow kids. Our grandson Jason Jr. 9, who dances traditional and Brittany Rose, 8, who dances jingle and Wakiyan, 1, who dances tiny tot. This was Brittany Rose's first dancing for category. She has always danced at school dances, while accumulating points and trophies and they aren't told until the end of the school year, so the loss is more acceptable. She danced in a jingle dance special and she didn't win. As she came back to where we were sitting, the emotion of that loss showed clearly on her face.

She wept in her mom's arm and in turn her mother, my daughter's eyes misted up feeling the pain her daughter was feeling. I felt for my granddaughter and her loss and soon my eyes misted up.

It wasn't long though before she soon forgot her emotional surge and was off to dancing again. Her parents and her Kaka (grandpa) were very supportive of her and spoke to her about winning and losing.

It was that support and the words of encouragement and anticipation of her expectations that helped her.

My daughter said she remembered how her dad would tell her that in competition it was about feeling the joy and fun of the game and not the anticipation of winning that helped her in her life of competing in sports and it was something she used in her life in accepting loss.

Teaching our children about accepting loss and finding strength in ourselves and in our spirit is something that we don't do enough in our tiwahe. It's hard to do as parents if we don't quite understand how to do it ourselves.

If we don't know how to gain that strength and deal with that loss, it can get tough to deal with and soon we start to pacify that emotion of loss and confusion with something that eases the pain.

And thus an addiction is born and it continues until we face that wound and work to heal it.

Those addictions can range from pacifying with alcohol, meth, peji, overeating and gambling. Each of those ease the pain and it soon becomes a disease. All we needed to begin with is awareness and understanding and having a life skill that is important and that is skill is finding strength in ourselves as we are. When we have that strength we have structure.

Our families deal with this on the reservation all the time, it is a survival mode. They deal with a day to day existence in terms of food, shelter and giving their children the best they could possibly give them. They depend on programs such as Youth Opportunity as a resource.

They depend on the schools as a resource, they depend on the tribe as resource, they depend on the communities that their children are a part of, and they depend on family structure.

So as we are searching for answers how to have better schools to makethose mandates or how to have a better tribal government, how to create more jobs or how to combat the social ills that are a part of infrastructure, maybe we should look at that common foundation we all have and that is within our tiwahe.

That is where it begins.

Northern Perspectives

We need to go overboard to stay informed

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I sat and talked with Leroy Hairy Shirt at the Rosebud Sioux tribal building on Thursday, mostly to kill some time as the world went slowly by. Leroy said he thought I was still at the university and I had to correct him and say that I had left there 3-4 years ago. I done gave back to my tribal nation and with some trepidation, I look back fondly at the 20 year block that represents my tenure in the work world.

I told Leroy I was a writer of sorts now and had written over 140 articles about Rosebud and Pine Ridge over the course of the last year. As Leroy scoured his mind to see if he recalled any of my writing, he admitted the only thing he remembered about the paper I write for was 'Ask Anna.'

I was somewhat taken aback and told him that I would document our conversation and double-check to see if he had purchased the paper this week.

After I contemplated what Leroy was saying and reflected on what impact the media has on the average Sicangu citizen, I realized that either most people do not have the extra buck to purchase a newspaper or they simply buy one that everyone is used to; and if it happens to be a community paper, it probably doesn't integrate a Lakota perspective into the news and stories.

I think Lakota people are getting short changed if they do not hear all of the facts and nuances of a gathering or event. If there is Lakota being spoken, readers will want to know what it is that was said. I'm fortunate that I can translate what is being said with some accuracy for our readers.

Most of us get complacent, especially if we have settled into accepting life as it comes our way and we don't reflect on the issue of whether or not we should support a Lakota newspaper. There are many out there and many are working to do the best they can in keeping the news real and culturally relevant. I like it when a Lakota newspaper endeavors to carry news that contains the language, philosophy and culture of the people. Most of the time that, in itself, is a gift as much of the language and culture is beginning to reside in a smaller pool of people.

It is not enough to write a story simply based upon whom, what and where, but to reflect on what actually transpired in a human and culturally connected sense.

For example, I don't like it when archeologist tear up the countryside unearthing cultures that should be left alone; such things do not belong in the museum, but should be respected.

If I have to read about such dubious events, I would rather read about the processes that were involved. I would want to know how a site was identified in the first place and whether or not it was protected by some historic preservation act.

It is interesting to see what actions local Native people take in response to such intrusion. Sometimes the people are successful in preserving the site and leaving it undisturbed for cultural and spiritual reasons.

It is too bad that we cannot require such sacred places as Bear Butte and Devils Tower to be left undisturbed. When outside interference comes in the form of climbers and hikers, birds and other wildlife are necessarily disturbed and that is so shameful.

Getting back to my visit with Leroy, he was thinking out loud when he said that Lakota people have a hard time getting work and even sitting on the treaty council.

I didn't quite catch what he was saying about the iyeska and though it may not have been complimentary, I did say that, indeed, the 80-85 percent unemployment rate is bound to affect us all one way or another. Lastly, I did say that he should spend his buck to buy a newspaper that is reflective of Lakota people.

Notes From Indian Country

Killing the messenger is popular in the media

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

An article in Sunday's Rapid City (SD) Journal caught my attention. It was about the impending retirement of the Journal's editor, Peggy Sagen.

Sagen, 56, was diagnosed with ovarian cancer and has been waging a gallant fight against it for the past three years. She said she decided to step back from the day-to-day job in order to spend more time with her family. She will continue part time until a new editor is hired.

Several months ago I visited Sagen in her office at the Journal. I wanted to find out why a newspaper that is always editorializing about freedom of the press is so hypocritical in supporting it editorials. I asked her why my weekly column, which made its debut in the Rapid City Journal 27 years ago, was now censored.

Sagen was gracious and open during our discussion, but she deferred her comments about why my column was censored in the Journal to the publisher, Bill Masterson, Jr. It appeared to me that she was sincerely upset over having to go against one of the first principles of journalism: you do not kill the messenger because you don't like the message.

During our discussion it became clear to me that if it was up to her there would be no such censorship. One of the first lessons taught in J-school is the sacrosanct ideology of freedom of the press. But such lofty ideals are often sacrificed by the upper echelons of management for larger profits or subverted by the power of a publisher who too often takes criticism of his newspaper personally and responds by killing the messenger.

I believe there was a different breed of editors and publishers 27 years ago when my weekly column first appeared in the Rapid City Journal. There was a "hands-off" publisher named Rusty Swan who did not interject his personal feelings or opinions to those folks laboring in the newsroom. I know because I was working in that newsroom as a reporter.

There was an editor named Jim Kuehn who took a chance when he hired me at the urging of the managing editor, Jim Carrier, who had come to the Journal from the Associated Press in Minneapolis.

It was Carrier who hired me, but it was Kuehn who stood behind me even when threats from advertisers demanded that he stop my column. I know he must have discussed this with Swan, the publisher, but I never heard a word from him asking me to change the tone of my columns.

But time marches on and other editors come and go. I immediately clashed with a new editor at the Journal named Joe Karius. A practicing Catholic, he became upset when I wrote a column about the myriad of problems we faced as students at the Holy Rosary Indian Mission on the Pine Ridge Reservation while boarders there. He accused me of being a "Catholic basher" and indicated that he would monitor my columns from then on.

To me "monitor" meant "censorship" and I told him that I was pulling my column from the Journal. And I did.

After Karius moved on to the Brookings (SD) Register, my column appeared sporadically in the Journal, but when I openly criticized the Journal at a conference for Indian students held at Crazy Horse Memorial in the Black Hills, the publisher, Masterson, took it personally and told his editor that my column would never be published in that paper again.

This year when the Journalism Conference for Native Americans was again held at Crazy Horse Memorial, sponsored by the Freedom Forum and the Rapid City Journal, I had to ask myself how a newspaper and an organization that practiced censorship could falsely present themselves as standards of freedom of the press to the Indian students in attendance. I found this to be the epitome of hypocrisy. I might add that since I criticized Jack Marsh of the Freedom Forum and Masterson, and rightfully so in my mind, I have not been invited back to speak to the Indian students.

And the Freedom Forum, that supposed bastion of freedom of the press and expression, will not invite me to speak to the Indian students at its annual Journalism Conference at the University of South Dakota, because, according to one of the former Conference organizers, Ray Chavez, "They are afraid of what you might say." Excuse me! Afraid of what I might say? Isn't that what freedom of expression is all about?

I am not completely censored in Rapid City. The new Rapid City Weekly News publishes my column periodically.

When I published Indian Country Today I firmly believed in freedom of expression. Whether I agreed or disagreed with a writer or whether a writer called me an SOB, it went into my newspaper. Is this a concept now lost to the mainstream media?

I wish Peggy Sagen well in her retirement and I know she would agree with me that freedom of the press is much too important to leave in the hands of the unprincipled. It would seem that killing the messenger is their favorite sport.

Guest Column

Makosica cowboys out for a little fun!

BY FRANCIS CHARLES APPLE

Special Guest Column to the Times
Francis Apple lives in Kyle, S.D. and is a retired Lakota language instructor and clergy.

A bunch of top cowhands got together and planned to venture out to a semi professional Rodeo in Wall, known as the B Stampede, this was during the summer of 1947. Since it wasn't that far away from the Rez, they rode their well trained Indian ponys to Wall, which was only a hop and a skip away. These Lakota cowboys had been training in their respective categories for months at the Clifford Rodeo Arena.

They were as follows

1. Jimmy Dixon, saddle bronc and calf roping, riding Omaha, a horse that can do anything but talk.

2. Ross Henry, member of the Cowboy Turtle association Professional Bull Rider who won many championships across the Nation including the Madison Square Garden which at that time was the national finals and also the prestigious Cheyenne Frontier days.

He entered the bull riding and the calf roping, riding his well trained Medicine Hat Horse named itankp oqi.

3. Kenneth Apple, saddle bronc with a proven track record in his specialty. He also entered in the bull dogging contest this was cenique because no Lakota Cowboys had ever entered this event.

He practiced for weeks at the Clifford Ranch which was located near the White River in what was called the Bombing Range. He trained a muscular pretty named chub that could carry him to the pay window at any given white mans rodeo.

4. Tony Apple, saddle bronc and the bareback events.

Tony was equally good as his brother Kenneth, where ever they wanted people brothers compete against each other.

5. And then there was Chaney Hernandez who grew up amongst some of the toughest, roughest rodeo performers including the reservations best, a pretty black stallion named Black Diamond, a big sarrell named Bugger Red.

Entered in the saddle bronc and calf roping riding his well known bay horse with four white stockings and a white blaze on his face. Many reservation cowboys won money on this horse who gives a hundred and ten percent each time.

This swift Indian pony's name was Dandy.

I was only the hazer for my brother Kenneth.

Riding our family horse named Seven, short for 72. Seven came from the last horse bucking string.

To make the long story long our top rodeo hands didn't get to sow their talent.

I was only 16 years old at the time, so I watched the horses while our boys went to the bar to have a little fun, after closing time I heard a commotion, seemingly the whole town of wall was chasing the Lakota cowboys towards the rodeo grounds. Our horses were ready to go so we made a clean getaway we got back to the Clifford Ranch at dawn.

What I'm trying to say in this true story is - Our Lakota Cowboys could compete with the best of them.

And our Lakota horses were equally as good.

Things to empower yourself

I know what my worth and value is

By Patty Pourier

When I start to feel depressed, I look at the cause and usually it is because of feelings of not having much worth or value or not being accepted. Worth, value and acceptance. How can or does this affect us?

When I was growing up, worth and value came from working hard. Whether it is school, at home, on a tractor working a field or riding horseback, worth and value from my parents came from hard work. This was not all bad. It did help me create a very strong work ethic. This work ethic has carried me to become somewhat of a success in my career. Being 48-years old, and for the most part looking pretty successful on the outside, you might never think I have feelings of worthlessness. Not true.

Many times I let people, places and things affect me. For instance, I had someone write a letter about me that attacked me personally, in every area of my life.

I could have chosen to take it in and believe it as the truth. Even though I knew that many things in the letter were false. When I do this it leads to a feeling being worthless and valueless.

But that is my choice.

As an example, I remember Father Martin, a circuit speaker for Alcoholics Anonymous in the 70s, saying in one of his films, "If someone called you a chair would you be offended?" The young lady he was asking looked at him-kind of dumb founded and said, "No." He asked her "Why?" She said that she would not be offended because she knew she was not a chair. He then asked her, "Why then would you be any more offended if someone called you a whore if you knew you where not one?" The point being, it is our choice to become offended or not let others opinions of us control us if they are not true.

If you have done the very best you can, and have not been motivated out of something negative like bitterness or resentment and peoples opinions of your behavior are critical than, that is their problem not yours.

Co-dependency that is being dependent on others for our worth and value, helps to make the line of your responsibility for self-worth blurry. But, it clearly is all about you, and not about the other person's opinions of what you have done or have not done correctly or incorrectly.

I am reminded of the old saying, "You can please some of the people some of the time, and you can please all of the people some of the time, but you can never please all of the people all of the time."

After 25 years of sobriety, I still have the 30-day Alcoholics Anonymous coin I received in my jewelry box. On the back it says, "To thy own self be true." And I know when what I am doing or saying is good and honest and true. I know when my motives are out of anger and self-righteousness. I also know that some people are just plain not going to like me because of the color of my skin, my personality, or my ethnic background.

That is how it is. Other people are responsible for their ability to function in this world as best they can, and I am continually responsible for my actions and my reactions. If others feel the need to take my inventory, I will try to remember that that is my job, not theirs, and the two people I have to answer to, are looking back at me in the mirror and watching over me from above.

Five native women running for state seats, we need to support them

Dear Editor:

I have long enjoyed Tim Giago's columns and his writings and opinions, while growing up in South Dakota and now while growing, um, older and living in Minneapolis.

His recent defense of Cecilia Fire Thunder's stand against the state's abortion ban and quest for an alternative on her reservation is heartening as is his respect of women's control over their own bodies.

Today I read of the "unprecedented" runs by two Native men for Congressional seats in the upcoming election, Bruce Whalen, a Republican, and Tom Begay on the Independent ticket.

Indeed these men are breaking new ground in South Dakota politics, but running against Rep. Herseth its highly unlikely they'll be able to run successful campaigns, not in the least because of Whalen's allegiance to GOP politics.

What is truly unprecedented AND exciting are the five Native women running for state legislative offices in South Dakota.

Charon Asetoyer is running for a Senate seat in District 21 and Faith Spotted Eagle is working for a House seat in the same district. Both live in Lake Andes and their district includes both the Yankton Sioux and Crow Creek Reservations as well as many small communities.

Theresa Two Bulls is looking good to keep her Senate seat and out in Rapid City Paula Long Fox is running for a House seat and Theresa Spry for a Senate seat.

All of these fine women are running as Democrats and all except Two Bulls are facing primary challengers. Each of them needs support to get through the primary.

I think you'll agree that much needed attention to issues rarely brought to campaign rhetoric is one of the most exciting parts of these candidacies.

Each works hard in her life to address the harsh problems of youth on and off reservations and economic and environmental injustices. The potential for progress in South Dakota between communities and reservations, Natives and whites, business and environment is finally up front and center in this election cycle in the campaigns of these women.

The hope they cast into the future is one of their greatest gifts to young women and Native youth in South Dakota as they create new paths to inclusive, participatory democracy by their example.

Whether the SD Democratic Party will rise up to support these candidates is yet to be seen but I'm not waiting around.

To wage strong runs in their primaries we all need to pitch in and help in whatever ways we can, through-funding, volunteer canvassing, letters to editors – you know the routine.

Please help support these candidates for progress. Below you'll find contact information to contribute to campaigns or give them each a call and find out how they expand the electoral dialogue with their positions and unique experiences working for diverse communities.

Spiritual key to 'The Great Mystery'

Dear Editor:

In the documentary film "The Great Mystery," there is a scene in which Gerald One Feather discusses the challenge of being the staff bearer for the Lakota Nation.

A leader of the Lakota nation in these times must be creative, he says, and must involve the spirit, adding "if you don't involve the spirit, then nothing happens."

In the next BIU event, to be held Sunday April 30 in Rapid City, Mr. One Feather and his wife Ingrid One Feather will be joined by Dr. George Tinker of Iliff School of Theology in Denver at a community forum to honor the legacy of Vine Deloria Jr. Dr. Tinker, who will lead the forum, is Professor of American Indian Cultures and Religious Traditions at Iliff.

One Feather is one of the founders of Oglala Lakota College, and Ms. One Feather is a teacher who has studied theology at Cook College & Theological School in Arizona. All three knew Dr. Deloria well, and we are privileged to be able to listen to them tell us about him, his stunning creativity, and how he "involved the spirit" in his life's work.

The forum will also include clips from Catherine Corona's new documentary "The Great Mystery," including interviews with Dr. Deloria.

Many of us first became acquainted with Dr. Deloria's thinking when he published his groundbreaking work "Custer Died for Your Sins" in 1969.

The book was a major awakening to those of us who, while aware of the sins of our fathers committed toward Native Americans from the 1600's and into the twentieth century, were ignorant of our own cultural blindness and the failures of our state and federal governments under our own watch. It was addressed to a generation which accepted the fact that its predecessors committed atrocities, and was willing to express regret and apologize for them.

But Dr. Deloria demanded that we take another step and accept the fact that, in our age, seeming beneficences such as assimilation might be motivated by greed for the natural resources which had been left to Native Americans by sheer happenstance.

Ideologically challenging, the book is quite readable, often entertaining. It is filled with incisive wit and deep insights into the cultural clashes that were becoming more apparent at that time. It remains a timely and provocative work in the twenty-first century.

In the 30 years or so that followed "Custer Died for Your Sins," Dr. Deloria continued his probing into the religious and philosophical differences between Native and European cultures, to the point where he is widely regarded as one of a handful of truly significant theologians and philosophers of the past century.

"God Is Red," which in 2003 was published in a third edition (with a foreword by Dr. Tinker), is in my estimation an indispensable work to anyone who considers himself or herself to be a serious student of theology.

The work demands that its readers confront the arrogance of a belief system that embraces the supernatural events recorded in the Bible as historical fact, yet patronizingly dismisses Native American narratives of creation and spiritual powers as mere folklore.

Recently, in the startling work "Evolutionism, Creationism, and Other Modern Myths," (2002) Dr. Deloria asserts that a major part of the scientific community has essentially created a new religious dogma in its insistence that evolution is the only acceptable explanation for the natural world.

This dogma is no more valid, he argues, than religious fundamentalism which insists upon viewing creation as a specific event rather than as an existing life system.

In his many works on spirituality, religion and philosophy, Dr. Deloria never abandoned his confrontational style.

I respectfully call it guerilla theology. I believe, however, that whether or not one accepts his thoughts and teachings, anyone who sincerely and continuously explores his or her own spirituality should endeavor to understand them.

While you may not adopt them, I think you must ponder them deeply before you ultimately choose a spiritual path.

We were privileged to have had him among us, and we are privileged that he left behind such a profound body of work which was undeniably creative and certainly "involved the spirit."

The Bridges for Intercultural Understanding Committee has sponsored several highly successful events which have focused on global intercultural issues, and for this forum is turning attention to local and regional intercultural issues.

The April 30 event at SD School of Mines & Technology, at 3 p.m. to honor Vine Deloria and his work gives us an opportunity to bring our neighboring cultures together.

The forum is free to the public. Don't pass it up.

Wayne Gilbert is President of the Synagogue of the Hills in Rapid City, although his thoughts are not intended to be necessarily representative of the Jewish faith.

He was a participant in the 2004 BIU Forum "Prospects for Peace: Historical Roots of the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict."

MUMPS

As of April 17, 2006 Nebraska, 92 confirmed and probable cases have been reported to the Nebraska Department of Health (DOH). As of April 29, 2006 IOWA, 975 confirmed, probable, and suspected cases of mumps have been reported to the Iowa Department of Health.

The majority of cases are occurring among persons 18-25 years of age, Many of whom are vaccinated. Additional cases of mumps, possible linked to the Iowa outbreak, are also under investigation in seven neighboring states, including Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, and Wisconsin.

The Iowa Department of Health has identified two (2) persons diagnosed with mumps who were potentially infectious during travel on nine different commercial flights involving two airlines between the timeframe of March 26, 2006 - April 2, 2006. The origin and arrival cities for these flights included Cedar Rapid/ Waterloo, IA; Dallas, TX; Detroit, MI; Bentonville, AR; Minneapolis, MN; St. Louis, MO; Tucson, AZ; and Washington, DC.

Symptoms & Signs

After a 14 to 24 day incubation period, the onset of mumps occurs with chills, headache, anorexia, malaise and a low to moderate grade fever that may last 14 to 24 hours before salivary gland involvement is noted.These symptoms may be absent in mild cases.

Diagnosis

Diagnosis of typical cases during an epidemic is easy; diagnosis of sporadic cases is not.

Prognosis and Prophylaxis

Prognosis is excellent in uncomplicated mumps. Although rarely, a relapse occurs after about 2 weeks, particularly in postpubertal patients; mumps may involve organs other than the salivary glands. Symptoms may precede, accompany, follow, or occur without salivary gland involvement.

Live mumps virus vaccine is the agent of choice for active immunization. This vaccine produces no significant local or systemic reaction and requires only one injection. The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends vaccination (with measles-mumps, rubella) at 12 to 15 months of age and again at entry into grade school or junior high school. Post exposure vaccination does not protect against mumps from that exposure.

Treatment

Treatment is symptomatic. A soft diet reduces pain caused by chewing. Acidic substances (e.g. citrus fruit juices) may also cause discomfort and should be avoided. Analgesics may be used for headache and general malaise.

Vaccination

The current recommendation is that a first dose of MMR be administered at age 12 to 15 months, with a second dose at four to six years. If the second dose is missed it can also be administered during adolescence.

FAMILY EMERGENCY HEALTH INFORMATION

It is important to think about health issues that could arise if a flu pandemic occurs and how they could affect you and your loved ones. For example, if a mass vaccination clinic is set up in your community, you may need to provide as much information as you can about your medical history when you go, especially if you have a serious health condition or allergy. Gather important health records (like vaccination card) in a folder or binder marked 'Health Records' and keep them in one place. Remember to include information on your pets.

Create a family emergency health plan using this information. Fill in information for each family member in the space provided. Like much of the planning for a pandemic, this can also help prepare for other emergencies.

BEFORE* a pandemic may occur, share the family member information and emergency contacts lists with your clinic and community-based health care providers, someone you trust (another family member) but who doesn't live with you and the emergency contact person who resides outside the area in which you live.)

PANDEMIC FLU PLANNING CHECKLIST FOR INDIVIDUALS AND FAMILIES

You can prepare for a world-wide influenza outbreak ("flu pandemic"). You should know what can happen during a pandemic and what actions you can take to reduce the effects of a flu pandemic on you and your family. A flu pandemic could last for 6-8 weeks in a community and may return several times.

Although all levels of government are preparing for a possible flu pandemic, personal planning is important because some community businesses and services may be disrupted or closed, including:

- School, childcare and work
- Public transportation and availability of gasoline and other fuels
- Grocery Stores, banks, gas stations, and other businesses
- Communications, including telephone, radio and television
- Utilities - electricity, gas
- Pharmacies and health care

This checklist will help you gather the information and resources you may need in case a flu pandemic or other emergency interrupts normal business activities

1. Assemble a Disaster Supplies Kit. Make sure that you consider the needs of family members with special needs. The Kit should include the following items:

- ☒ Water and food supplies. During a pandemic, you may not be able to get supplies from stores, so it is important for you to have extras on hand. This can be useful in other emergencies, such as power outages.
- ☒ At least 30 days supply of important medication. Ask your doctor and/or pharmacist if you can get an extra supply of your regular prescription drugs.
- ☒ Nonprescription drugs and other health supplies. These include pain relievers, stomach remedies, cough and cold medicines, fluids with electrolytes (e.g. sports drinks) and vitamins, Band-Aids, antibacterial ointments, tape and gauze.

2. Create a family emergency health plan. List emergency contact information. Consider how family members would be cared for if they got sick and what would be needed to care for them.

Richards cited for sweat lodge fire

DAYTON, Wyo. (AP) - An Oglala Lakota who says fire is essential for his traditional sweat lodge religious ceremonies was cited for a second time for violating a town ordinance against open fires.

Terry Richards, who was scheduled for a bench trial April 25 on his first citation, also was cited for refusing to identify himself to officers.

``They gave me another citation for the fire, and they got me for interfering with an officer, too,'' Richards said. ``They put me in handcuffs.''

In a sweat lodge ceremony, a fire is used to heat rocks, which are taken inside the lodge. Water poured over the hot rocks creates steam inside the lodge.

Richards said an open fire is essential to the integrity of the ceremony.

But two years ago, Dayton was almost destroyed in a wildfire, and town officials say any open fire violates local ordinances.

John Maronick Jr., a friend of Richards who is not Indian but does participate in sweat lodge ceremonies, also was cited for violating the open fire ordinance.

Whalen announces candidacy for U.S. House

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Bruce Whalen created a professional website on the internet and reports that he collected twice the number of signatures required for his petition as a candidate for the U. S. House of Representatives. The lone House seat representing South Dakota is held by incumbent Representative Stephanie Herseth (D-SD.)

Whalen embarked on his statewide campaign by announcing a five-city tour beginning at the Old Carpenter Hotel in Sioux Falls on April 20, proceeding to Watertown. Last Thursday he was scheduled to be in Aberdeen. On Friday he was scheduled to be in Pierre at Republican Headquarters and his final stop was at the historic Alex Johnson Hotel in Rapid City.

Whalen has a connection to the South Dakota Republic Party as he was hired a couple of years ago to work as a liaison to Lakota people and, in fact, some of his outreach efforts included manning a booth at powwows and dispensing information about the party.

In the interim since last being interviewed by the Lakota Country Times last spring, Whalen says that he has done a lot of study and reading on the issues. He said, "I have been reading and talking to a lot of people preparing for what lies ahead. The environment is going to change. We need to explain to each other how to prepare for the change in technology."

Bruce Whalen, his wife Carol and children Jeremiah and Elizabeth.

On Whalen's attractive website he writes, "Positive Government to Government relationships between American Indians and the United States Government are constitutionally guaranteed. As a tribal member and United States citizen I have a unique understanding of this relationship. Tribal governments are the poorest in the nation."

When asked what he brings to Lakota people he said, "I am a proud and loving husband and father of three. I used the same health care facilities and schools. My wife teaches at Oglala Lakota College." Furthermore, he said, "We need to understand laws and put infrastructure in place. We need to get partners in place, education, social responsibility, and laws to protect businesses."

He made the observation that the tribe does not always pay its bills out in the business world and it needs to take the responsibility to do that. "We need a voice in D.C. I talked to an elder and he was thrilled that I was running" he added. Whalen said that he had attended the Black Hills treaty council meetings in Pierre over the weekend held at the Ramkota Inn.

Whalen listed his priorities for his campaign in descending order as economic growth and job creation, the methamphetamine abuse issue, and an accountable government. He said, "The bureau system needs to go beyond and help tribal governments."

On the issue of health care, Whalen noted, "We need to cut down on the bureaucracy and increase health care. Veterans are being lost in limbo. They are being bounced up to the VA and back. We need to resolve that issue." He also said that the I.H.S. hospital should be opened up to non-Indians as it would bring more third party billing funds into the hospital and allow for the hiring of more doctors. Also, more visitors to the area would result in more money being spent in local businesses.

Whalen writes on his website, "I am happy to have the support of Governor Rounds, Senator John Thune, and Larry Diedrich." His campaign manager is Lee Breard and his campaign office may be reached at 605-430-7629.

Sen. Johnson: Use FEMA trailers in Indian Country

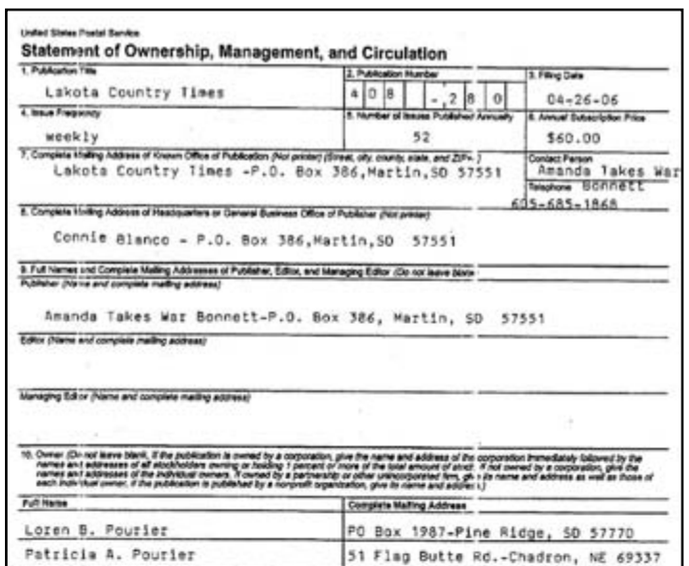
PIERRE, S.D. (AP) - Sen. Tim Johnson says he can think of a good use for as many as 20,000 unused FEMA trailers.

The South Dakota Democrat has suggested to the Federal Emergency Management Agency that the trailers be moved to Indian Country for housing and school buildings.

Many of the mobile homes purchased for hurricane victims are unused while 90,000 American Indian families are homeless or have inadequate housing, Johnson said.

``Rather than allow these homes to go to waste, they can be used immediately in native communities, not only for housing but also as additional classrooms for reservation schools, whose facilities are in desperate need of repair,'' Johnson's letter said.

``Providing these homes to native communities would be a much-needed step towards serving communities in crisis, and a thoughtful deployment of federal resources.''



FEMA has received Johnson's letter and is reviewing it, said Aaron Walker, the agency's press secretary.

Kyle Downey, spokesman for Sen. John Thune, R-S.D., said it's an idea worth pursuing and that using the trailers as schools would make the most sense.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs school construction budget was cut $117 million this year, Johnson said during a discussion of efforts by the Crow Creek Tribal School to replace living quarters and space lost in a dormitory fire a year ago.

``We are asking children to learn in school buildings that are literally falling down around them,'' Johnson said.

The BIA budget is just a proposal by the administration, Downey said. ``Congress ultimately decides how tax dollars are spent. Senator Thune has opposed many of the proposed reductions in spending for Indian Country,'' he said.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Hello, I was told of your intelligence and I was wondering if you could give some advice for my future. Do you see kids of my own in the future?

I'm just curious if I'll ever have a family of my own. I'm a college student right now and life right now seems it's going in the wrong direction. Do you see any changes in my life right now?

I'm stressed thinking of my friendship with people and family members and I need some help from someone like you. please write back soon. Thank you.

Worried and Stressed Out

Dear Worried and Stressed Out:

I hate to say it, but college age people are always under too much stress. There is a normal process going on, and that includes the breaking away from family in order to achieve independence.

This is conventionally called the generation gap, but it really is an express desire to create a private life away from the oggling eyes of adults. You are not going to agree with your family on how you should be living your life - as far as social interaction and assessments go.

Yes, I do see children in your future. There are three: two boys and one girl. I "see" that you believe that pregnancy is something you are not capable of - but please don't be fooled or a fool - you are quite capable of pregnancy.

There are many changes in your life right now. I do see a "boyfirend" - and I have to say that I agree with your family, he is bad news. He has no vision of his own for the future, is angry and on the edge.

It will take him down the road of alcohol and drugs - which is a very very rough road. Please don't join him on it. I do see another friend trying to talk you into taking a trip this summer.

It would be a good idea to get away, but you have to act more responsibly if you wish to be treated as someone who is responsible.

This time in your life is so important - it can make the difference in how hard you have to struggle in the future. If you do not complete your education now, you will struggle all the harder and have to work twice as hard to get half as far.

Please take better care of yourself. Your body and your mind need honor from you, don't ruin them with substances.

I see you as appreciating music, loving drama, and as having a good ability to communicate. Consider these aspects in yourself as you begin to build a bridge to the future. Consider the many aspects of film and film production and or music and music production. I know you do not think of yourself in these fields in the future - but you are a natural.

I see some depression within you - and I think it runs in your family. Depression robs us of our ability to cope logically, takes away our energy to get anything done, makes concentration more than difficult and creates chaos in relationships. Please avoid sugar, caffeine and high risk behavior. You might consider a little more sunshine on your body, a little more outdoor activity and exercise and avoid fast foods.

Take heart. You are a wonderful young woman with loads of potential. You can do anything you want if you don't throw the keys to your life away because there is no immediate gratification for you.

Take it easy on yourself, relax and quit deciding that because today you don't have anything the way you want it you never will.

A good life takes time - good time.

Blessings to you on your journey.

Dear Anna,

My boyfriend got both me and my sister pregnant - and what is worse is he says that we both trapped him. He also says that he likes us both the same.

I was really mad at my sister first, but she is only 15 and I am 18, and I figure he got to her with his smooth talking.

What do you see for us?

Will he decide to be with me instead of my sister?

Will she be okay with that? I think my brother and my dad want to kill him.

Will they hurt him?

Wants to know

Dear Wants to know:

I can't believe you want to know if he will choose you? Why on earth would you want him? I can hear the groans from every man, woman and child that reads this. They all want to ask: "What's the matter with her?" You got that right, not what's the matter with him - but what in the world are you thinking?

I do see him being around when the babies are born (you are two months further along than your sister).

I do see you getting over him after you get a real good and truthful look at who he is. I do see him choosing your sister over you. I think that is for the best.

I do see you having a boy, and your sister a girl. I do see you with another man in about a year. I do see you moving to Rapid City to go to school and to work and leaving the baby with your mom.

I don't see your dad or brother killing him - but there could be some pretty strong interaction.

Advise him to stay away for awhile - it is healthier for everybody.

Good Luck

Dear Anna,

I don't live in South Dakota anymore, but sometimes I get a copy of the Lakota Country Times from my mother. I didn't feel very good for quite a while, and then I discovered that there was something funny in my coffee.

My boyfriend brought me a glass of water when I was in the bath tub, and it was cloudy and tasted bad but I drank it.

For two weeks I could hardly lift my head up off the pillow. I found some roach killer under the sink and I think that is what is in my coffee and water.

I want to leave my boyfriend but I have to wait until I get some Indian money that I sent in for.

I don't know why my boyfriend of 9 years would want to hurt me. What is going on? Is he seeing another woman?

Cloudy Water

Dear Cloudy:

Are you out of your mind? Who cares if he is seeing another woman - it is better for you if he is.

He is trying to kill you slowly girl - with poison, or at the very least drive you insane (which will happen with those chemicals) so he can somehow, in your weakend position get your money away from you when it comes in. He believes you will be getting more than a $100,00 dollars, and although I don't see it as that much (more like 24 thousand) it's enough to kill for, but not to die for.

Please leave him immediately, call somebody and get bus fare and come back to the rez, don't wait for your money or the only thing it will be spent on is your funeral.

You can have your check forwarded to you on the Rez, somebody will tell you who to call or write - just ask.

Dear Anna,

My mom and dad are always fighting over me. They are not married, and I go to my dad's sometimes when he picks me up, but everytime they yell.

It is about my shoes, my jacket, money, school stuff, sports - you name it. I want to go and live with my aunt and leave them both. Can I do that? Can you help me?

Only 9

Dear 9:

This is sad for you. Your mother will read this, so I changed your age so she won't know it's you. Your dad's mother will read it too. They will begin not to yell around you. Luckily, they both love you, but you are now a current war zone - it's kind of like you are Iraq. They want to fight for your heart, but they will both lose.

Your aunt will let you stay with her for the summer - all you have to do is ask her. Your mom and dad will fight even when you are gone, but luckily, your grandmother will step in and make arrangements to let you go to her house so your dad can pick you up without them having a fight.

Above all, please understand that this is not your fault or your fight. It has nothing to do with you. It is their "stuff" and they need to grow up, and grow up now - and you can tell them both that - and say "Anna said."

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests maybe subject to publication.

Walk for women and children at Eagle Butte set for April 29

EAGLE BUTTE - On Saturday, April 29, the Sacred Heart Center will host the Third Annual Reclaiming the Sacredness of Women and Children Prayer Walk/Ride in Eagle Butte. The event is being held in conjunction with National Sexual Assault Awareness Month.

Participants are asked to meet at the cultural center in Eagle Butte at 8 a.m. After a brief review of road rules, the walk will begin. There will be four prayer stops on the walk. The event will conclude with a prayer ceremony at Green Grass, conducted by Arvol Looking Horse, keeper of the Sacred White Buffalo Calf Pipe.

In 2005, the National Violence Against Women Survey estimated 302,000 women and almost 93,000 men were raped over a twelve month period. Survivors of sexual violence are faced with long and short-term effects, including pregnancy, sexually transmitted diseases and emotional difficulties, which can lead to isolation from family and friends, depression and even suicide.

Last year, the Sacred Heart Women's Shelter served 950 clients - an alarming 28 percent were direct victims of sexual violence.

Law enforcement officials will provide an escort for the entire walk. There will also be vehicles available for those in need of a ride or a break during the course of the walk. All participants will receive a t-shirt featuring the beautiful artwork of JoAnne Bird. Lunch and water will be provided, courtesy of the Sacred Heart Center.

The Sacred Heart Center is grateful for the continued support of the South Dakota Coalition Against Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault. For more information or to volunteer for the event, please call Marcy Lesmeister or Stephanie Good Bear at (605) 964-7233.

Cheyenne Eagle Butte High School girls promote fashion

EAGLE BUTTE - Twenty-two beautiful Lakota ladies walked the runway on Good Friday April 14 at the Cheyenne Eagle Butte High School Auditorium.

The event drew a fun crowd that was pleased with the fashion show as well as the local bands.

The night began with a dark auditorium and colored lights on stage and around the band. Sammi Ducheneaux, graduate of Cheyenne Eagle Butte High School, was the master of ceremonies.

The curtains opened to a nicely lit stage themed "Hollywood Lights" and out came the first model, Julie White Dog, 6-year old C-EB Kindergarten student wore an elegant navy blue gown flipping her hair with hand on her hips as she stopped and posed for the crowd. Following Julie was a steady flow of girls between the ages of 15-18 walking to the beat of Jay-Z, Christina Mullian, Three Six Mafia and Kanye West.

After the first show, Jessica Kennedy, fashion show director announced the first band, Riot Heads. Walker Rose, sophomore at C-EB wailed on the guitar as Lindee Lawrence also a sophomore at C-EB pounded the drums. The crowd was amazed at the talent these two individuals displayed and liked the fact the drummer was a female.

Next was the theme, "Total Eclipse of the Heart" which displayed the black gowns. After this scene, the girls gathered together in a single line as the curtains closed. The next youth band, Cover Girls entertained the crowd as the models changed for the third theme. The Cover Girls are Casey Swires an 18 year old from Isabel on lead guitar and lead singer. Michael Shannon, Dupree high school also on guitar and Clayton "Swayzie" Kennedy, Dupree high school on the drums. The band played hits from today's alternative hit selections. Orville Lee, was in charge of the sound equipment and without him the night would not have been as great as it was.

Following the Cover Girls, the next theme was "April Showers" which showed off our selection of summer gowns in pastel colors. Betsy Mitchell, President of the Cheyenne River Youth Project Board, thanked the crowd for coming and expressed her appreciation for the support of the Program.

"The Main has sponsored the Passion for Fashion event for girls in order to receive a free prom dress as well as a make up kit and stylist tips for participating in our yearly slumber party. This year Programs Manager, Jessica Kennedy took it to the next level by organizing a real Fashion Show!"

The last theme of the night, "Scarlet Sky" poured out the ladies in red.

The red gowns elegantly filled the stage accompanied by the rest of the girls in one final walk.

Riot Heads played the final song and the crowd was left in awe and whispers filled the auditorium on how they didn't want the fashion show to end!

Fashion sense came all the way from England and Germany as they worked on props, lights and décor for months prior to the event. Help from graduates of the high school; Jill Kessler, Randi Peacock, Jessica Haskell, Jenilee Kennedy and Keni Jo Hulm who assisted the girls with make up, hair and back stage directing.

An all night slumber party also took place that same night at the Main. The girls received gifts from CRYP donors from across the United States. The girls enjoyed pizza and stayed up late trying on dresses, fixing each other's hair and make up and fell asleep watching movies. "It is very important for us as a Youth Center to reach out to our young ladies and do our part to restore the sacredness in women."

"We give back one night of innocence to the girls and remind them of how valuable they are in hopes to help with self-respect, confidence and repair self esteem. The girls were happy and enjoyed a night of beauty while making new friends and a memory that will last a lifetime," said Jessica Kennedy, CRYP programs manager.

The girls begin by stating the Girl Scout Promise and learn about friendship, setting goals and good manners. They also prepare arts and crafts to take home.

"The girls are very creative and fun to work with" said Jessica Kennedy, troop leader, "they bring out the little girl in me and its rewarding knowing I am making a difference in the life of a child."

United Tribes graduation May 5

BISMARCK, N.D. - The 2006 commencement ceremony for graduates of United Tribes Technical College is scheduled for 1 p.m. on Friday, May 5 at Lone Star Arena on the college campus in Bismarck.

Students will be honored who have earned Associate of Applied Science Degrees and Certificates of Completion in 16 different academic and vocational programs. The graduates are from 21 different tribal nations.

The event concludes the 2005-06 academic year, the college's 37th year serving American Indian students and their families.

The class motto is: "Tradition and Education will Lead us to Success." As a lasting legacy, six trees will be planted on campus in honor of the graduates and to recognize North Dakota Arbor Day, May 5.

Scheduled to present talks are Dr. David M. Gipp, UTTC president; Tex G. Hall, Mandan-Hidatsa-Arikara Nation chairman and chair of the UTTC Board of Directors; and other tribal leaders on the college governing board from the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, Sisseton-Wahpeton Oyate, Spirit Lake Nation, and the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa.

Some graduates completed their course of study at the end of the Fall 2005 term. Scholarships and other honors earned by individuals will be announced during the ceremony. A reception at the UTTC cafeteria will follow. Family, friends and public are invited to attend.

In case of inclement weather, the ceremony will be held in the large gymnasium of the James Henry Community Building.

Crow Creek Tribal School could close because of insurance dispute

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) - The Crow Creek Tribal School is in danger of closing because an insurance company has not settled the school's claims from a fire that destroyed the student dormitory at the campus in Stephan a year ago, officials said Friday.

School Superintendent Scott Raue and Gov. Mike Rounds held a news conference to discuss the situation, saying they hope Minnesota-based St. Paul Travelers will settle the insurance dispute quickly so the school for American Indian students can finish the school year.

Raue said the school, run by the Crow Creek Sioux Tribe in central South Dakota, used its own money to build temporary dormitory buildings and a kitchen area so the school could operate this year. He said the school money was spent in anticipation of getting the insurance settlement.

Raue said that unless the insurance dispute is settled, the school might be unable to make payroll on May 3, which could mean the school would close two weeks before the end of the school year. Besides local students, the school also educates students from other areas of the state.

``All along it was our goal to make sure the students at our school had a safe setting, an educational setting that we could operate for over 600 students so they could be safe. We accomplished that," Raue said. ``We are here today because of the fact that the insurance carrier has not in my estimation done good faith in what they promised they would do."

Rounds, who was in the insurance business before becoming governor, said the press conference was not intended to put pressure on St. Paul Travelers, which he said has an excellent reputation. But he said he directed the state Insurance Division to write a letter asking the insurance company about the delay, and he said he has asked state Attorney General Larry Long to look into the matter.

``We fully intend to do everything we can to resolve the situation in hopefully an amicable fashion prior to the time the school would have to close," the governor said.

Kim O'Connell, a spokesperson for St. Paul Travelers, said company officials familiar with the case were not available late Friday to comment.

Investigators couldn't determine the cause of the April 2005 fire, but said it was not deliberately set.

Raue said the school's total loss from the fire amounted to about $4.5 million. The Bureau of Indian Affairs provided $1.3 million to help build temporary dorms so classes could open last fall, and the school has received some other help, including about $400,000 from the state.

St. Paul Travelers already has advanced some money to the school, but officials said they believe the school is still short about $2.6 million.

The school was insured for extra expenses and lost income through a program in which many South Dakota schools join together to insure themselves. Money from those schools is used to cover small losses. But the program, run by the South Dakota Associated School Boards, buys insurance from St. Paul Travelers to cover large losses.

Dick Tieszen, a lawyer for Associated School Boards, said St. Paul Travelers has argued that because the school received $1.3 million from the BIA, the insurance company is entitled to a credit that would reduce the insurance payment by that amount.

Tieszen said he could not discuss details, but the school has offered to accept less than its original claim in order to settle the issue quickly.

``The school is in jeopardy," Tieszen said.

The Crow Creek School District has 600 students, with about 400 in the middle school and high school in Stephan. Raue said 204 students live in the new temporary dorms built in Stephan.

Raue said the school system has 220 full-time and part-time teachers and other staff, and he hopes the staff members would agree to work without getting paid to finish the school year if the insurance dispute is not settled.

Crow Creek Sioux Tribal Vice Chairman Rocky Fallis said some people might criticize the decision to use operating money for the temporary dorms. But he said Raue should not be blamed for that decision because the tribal council, which also sits as the school board, agreed to that plan to keep the school open.

Sicangu youth found dead in south Antelope after prom nite

MISSION - According to FBI supervisor special agent, Robert Perry, based in Rapid City, 18 year old Sicangu youth Coleman Marshall was found dead in the south Antelope area. "There is an open death investigation with an autopsy scheduled." said Perry, with a further investigation in order to see if there was foul play.

Perry noted that the FBI may be releasing more information next week on the case.

Rosebud Law Enforcement Services criminal investigator, Chris Barrera, was unable to comment on the investigation and noted that the FBI has jurisdiction over the case.

Cheyenne River youth dies in gang prevention horse ride

EAGLE BUTTE - Morgan Yellow Head, 16, died last Sunday morning while riding on a horse that apparently was not yet broke for children to ride.

The Cheyenne River youngster was on a gang prevention ride from Eagle Butte to Green Grass.

There were approximately 20 people on the ride when the accident occurred along U.S. Highway 212 on Friday morning.

He was taken to the Eagle Butte I.H.S. hospital and then, flown to the Rapid City Regional Hospital where he died.

Pine Ridge IHS to expand

$6.6 million from collections will improve health care

BY AMANDA TAKES WAR BONNETT
Times Editor

PINE RIDGE - In this next year, a new wing will be added to Pine Ridge hospital that will improve health care for the area residents. The emergency room will be expanded within the facility and renovated. Furthermore, there will be individual rooms in the ER with walls that will afford privacy.

Last Friday, a special ceremony was held to break ground to symbolize the expansion of the hospital that extends out on the east side of the hospital and will provide 26,000 more square feet of space to better fit the needs of the health care on the reservation. Bill Pourier, CEO of the Pine Ridge unit, was master of ceremonies for the event and speakers included Oliver Red Cloud; Alex White Plume, Oglala Sioux vice president; Vern Donnell, current Cheyenne River Tribe CEO; Ester DeSersa; Monica Macek and Kathy Janis.

Pourier noted that DeSersa and Red Cloud were active during the time when the plans were first developed to build the new hospital, which was completed in 1993. Arta Carlow was also a primary lobbyist for the new hospital. DeSersa recalled how the times were back then on getting the new hospital built. "We worked for 20 years to get the hospital," she said. "I still have the shovels" from the ground breaking back then. She said more doctors and nurses are needed. "This ground breaking is very important, it's doing something for the people," she concluded.

Red Cloud spoke of the importance of teachings of the treaty. "What we have here today with the hospital," is from that treaty.

KILI Radio still struggling to get back on air, needs $76,000

BY AMANDA TAKES WAR BONNETT

PORCUPINE - After almost two weeks, KILI Radio 90.1 FM atop Porcupine Butte is still silent.

On Saturday, April 15, lightening struck near the ten bay antenna that takes up the top 100 feet of KILI's 300 foot tower and caused burning in the antenna.

The station's engineer was able to get it back on air on very low power but that eventually dropped and the station went off air on Sunday, April 23rd.. For the past 23 years, KILI Radio has repaired and spliced their transmission lines and patched theri antenna and knew they would eventually need to get a new antenna and the lightening accident has made it more real now said Melanie Janis, station manager.

Last week the initial price was around $50,000 to replace the antenna and the transmission lines. Since that time and after more work by the engineers, the price has gone up to $76,000.

Tom Casey, the station's development manager, said they are in the process of submitting an emergency proposal to Washington DC for funding from the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program, part of the Department of Commerce.

If funded, the money would

NCAA denies University of North Dakota appeal on nickname 'Fighting Sioux'

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS

INDIANAPOLIS, IN - On Friday, April 28 the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Executive Committee continued to list three collegiate institutions which will be subject to restrictions on the use of Native "nicknames" imagery and mascots during their appearance at NCAA championships should they choose to participate in such post season play.

The University of North Dakota's use of the nickname "Fighting Sioux" or its logo will not be allowed during NCAA championships; the NCAA wrote in a press release, "The Executive Committee concluded that Native American references used by each university create hostile or abusive environments inconsistent with the NCAA commitment to diversity, respect and sportsmanship."

Leigh Jeanotte, the Director of American Indian services at UND wrote in response to an email request, "Furthermore, it is troubling when most of the tribes of the Great Sioux Nation have submitted resolutions requesting UND to change the name, and they have not listened. This issue is definitely not over with the

Ester DeSersa and Oliver Red Cloud were special guests at the ceremony and did a wonderful job in describing the efforts in getting the new hospital. Juanita Scherich, Monica Macek and Bill Pourier all spoke of the importance of providing good health care. Photos by Amanda Takes War Bonnett.

It's why we have Indian Health Services on the reservations. "Remember the treaty takes care of us," he added. "We have to keep our treaty and don't lose it, it's the difference we have with other tribes, we have a treaty. It gives a voice in Washington," he said.

He gave a lesson in the Lakota language of how to say doctor. He said he can be pejuta wicasa which means medicine man or wicasa wakan, which means doctor,too. Wa means purity and kan means vein. That means keeping your blood pure to be healthy.

Monica Macek, facilities design and construction consultant for IHS, explained what the expansion will entail and how it will improve services to patients. Macek, Oglala Lakota, grew up in the Porcupine area, graduated from Red Cloud High School and then went to Notre Dame University where she received her education in engineering. She was recently "Facility Manager of the Year" by the Aberdeen Area Indian Health Service.

Current offices and exam rooms will be moved to the new wing which will allow more space for the emergency room and for the triage area.

The expansion will include an urgent care clinic and this will make it more efficient. Also, individual examination rooms in the emergency room will be regular walls instead of curtains. The expansion will link the emergency area to the x-ray area. The additional space will allow for a pediatrics clinic also, said Macek.

Pourier said the additional wing and expansion project will cost $6.6 million and all of the funding comes from third party collections since 2001. The staff of the hospital business office was noted for their efforts in collections. Third party collections come from Title 19 health insurance, Medicare and Medicaid, private health insurance and Veterans Administration monies.

Pourier also said, "Congress has to approve use of the monies used for construction costs. We had to provide the need for the expansion." That took time to get approved.

Macek said recently a seven apartment complex of three buildings was completed for hospital staff, also from money from collections from insurance companies.

She also noted other projects completed such as resealing the roads, completed the card swipe system, work on completed on the boiler system and heat pumps and carpet replacements to name a few.

A construction company hasn't been named yet for the project and will be in June, Macek said.

Donnell, participated in the first initial planning process for the expansion and is the former unit director for Pine Ridge and is now at Eagle Butte spoke of the importance of the congressional support for the Indian Health Service.

cover up to 75 percent of what they need.

They are also looking at other options for money he said.

The biggest problem is time," said Casey. He said if they gave the antenna manufacturer a down payment tomorrow, they said it could take up to six weeks to get the new antenna installed.

Another option is the possibility of going back on at low power and goingon air in a small listening area. It is just a possibility. "We get calls the time, why we aren't on air and what it will take to get back on air," he said.

KILI Radio has an Internet site that is streaming audio and allows up to 200 listeners at one time. With the radio being off air, the staff at the radio station are keeping the Internet site active. They are playing music, announcements and the possibility of doing some of the musical shows on the net. That site is www.kiliradio.org http://www.kiliradio.org/ . Last Saturday Mary White Face, Saturdays' Country Show produced her show over the Internet.

White Face, long time DJ, urges loyal listeners to take an active role in helping raise the money for the station. A fund raiser dance is planned on at Kyle on Friday, May 5 from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. at Las India Bonita or Angie's burritos stand.

There will be a dance machine and most of the station's DJs will be there. On Sunday, May 7 there will be another dance machine at Pinky's at 2 to 6 p.m.

She said they will be setting up other districts to raise funds. She said they will be setting up donation jars at the stores. For more information on the fundraisers, call Mary at 441-3171.

recent NCAA decision. UND now is considering legal action. I think this is also futile. Don't get me wrong as I think UND is a great institution with over 400 American Indian students and over 31 Indian related programs. These programs and students generate approximately $12 million annually for UND. Our goal is to become a recognized as a leading institution for American Indians nationally. Changing the "Fighting Sioux" name will make us an ever greater institution."

In a letter dated April 27 from the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, Chairman Ron His Horse Is Thunder described the tribe's continuing opposition of the nickname "Fighting Sioux"; he wrote, "The SRST maintains its stance opposing the "Fighting Sioux" athletic nickname and logo used by the University of North Dakota (UND). Attached is a copy of SRST council Resolution Number 438-05 passed in 2005 which officially and respectfully requests UND to discontinue use of its nickname and logo and supports the NCAA decision to bar the use of Native American tribal names in post season games by colleges and universities."

The University of Illinois-Champaign and Indiana University of Pennsylvania are the other two on the list with post-season restrictions. The NCAA decision also means that the three teams will not be allowed to host NCAA championships.

Over the last eight months, four colleges have been removed from the list because their namesake tribes have given their approval, while six others remain on the list with appeals pending. Five institutions have actually changed their names according to the NCAA press release and three will undergo NCAA staff review, while one college is on a watch list.

His Horse Is Thunder also wrote on behalf of SRST as he noted, "The SRST remains committed to protecting the integrity of the Dakota and Lakota (Sioux) culture and spirituality of its members, especially for SRST member alumni and current students of UND."

The day prior to the NCAA announcement, the Grand Forks Herald reported that UND president, Charles Kupchella, had sent a letter to the NCAA indicated that the university had permission to use the nickname. Kupcella had apparently based his letter on a letter from a member of the tribe's judiciary committee who had polled six of eight districts on the reservation about their stance on use of the nickname.

That is where His Horse Is Thunder intervened on Thursday and also sent a letter to the NCAA and said that the judiciary committee only had the authority to recommend such an action. He also noted that the council representative did not have the authority to lobby the NCAA.

UND needed tribal backing from both of the North Dakota Sioux tribes and the SRST would have required a full council vote in order to back the name use. Apparently, there was no such vote and His Horse Is Thunder is opposed to such approval as noted in his letter to the NCAA citing SRST resolution 438-05. It was not clear whether or not the Spirit Lake Sioux supported the nickname usage.

Tending to our own 'backyards'

It feels justifiable most of the time when we lay blame upon the dominant society for many of our social ills, emotional turmoil and economic challenges.

However, at some point we need to look inward and share the responsibility for discovering long-term solutions for whatever ails us.

Last month in Sioux Falls it was noted that methamphetamine is getting into the country from across the southern border and is flourishing on Indian reservations, to name one place, because of very lax laws, which are not stemming the flow.

It seems it is easier for us to take to task issues that are brought on by non-Indians and because of our historical trauma and we are quick to take up the signs and march when we see the unfairness of an issue.

It's easier for us to march on White Clay against the non-Indian than to do a 180 degree turn and march and demand responsiblity in our own backyard with the bootleggers and the selling of meth in our very own communities.

The impact of the 'Death to Meth' concert has provided awareness to those that attended. It's a good thing what the organizers of the concert have done.

If we look at some of the grant funding we have received whether by entitlement or by competitive grant funding we could look at some of that as laying the groundwork for innovative and creative solutions to the issues that confront us every day.

We have many young and capable Lakota students, professionals and those in the work place who should be exploring and dreaming up never before heard of solutions to some of the more daunting obstacles that we face.

Such things as new paradigms in economic development, creative designs in technological development and new conceptual ideas that will excite young people about the future is greatly needed.

There is so much more we can do and it is high time to start using the other ninety percent of our brains as we take the reins and become a stronger and determined Lakota society that is capable of withstanding the onslaught of the new century.

We can preserve and perpetuate our beautiful Lakota society, and at the same time be self-sufficient in promoting our natural resources, human capital, and ways in which to address the coming scourge of such things as the bird flu or even methamphetamine and its effects.

Our hope is that there will be uniform laws throughout Indian lands, which will address the punitive measures for methamphetamine sales.

Again, much praise to Saunie Wilson, Charlie White Elk, Beverly Tuttle and Carol O'Rourke for their hard work in organizing the one day "Death to Meth" concert. We appreciate your commitment.

'Very well, then — you're all deported!'

Guest Column

Building hometown prosperity

BY SEN. TIM JOHNSON (D-S.D.)
Special Guest Column

South Dakota is truly a wonderful place to call home - but it's not always the easiest place to make a living.

Though we have already made great strides in strengthening and diversifying our economy, we're still not where we want to be.

A shortage of good-paying jobs, especially in our more rural areas, is one of the key reasons many of our young people leave South Dakota. As they and other job-seekers pursue opportunities elsewhere, smaller towns wither away, and our state as a whole loses some of the people who are its single greatest asset.

This problem is not new one, and it is not unique to South Dakota.

Despite all the good things we've accomplished together in the past, though, there's still more to be done. In my conversations around the state, people have explained to me that they'd rather not have to leave their hometowns to seek prosperity elsewhere, but they feel they have no choice.

Too often, they feel that good-paying career opportunities are simply not available here. This needs to change.

In December of 2005, I asked South Dakotans to help me take stock of the things we're doing to promote economic development in our state. I sent out hundreds of surveys that asked what South Dakotans feel our priorities should be and held more than a dozen meetings about this topic in communities around our state.

Based on the information I received through my economic development survey, meetings with community leaders throughout our state, and the analysis of other experts, I have identified a set of four development strategies, or "pillars," that represent my priorities for advancing South Dakota's economic development from the federal level. Together, these pillars make up what I call a "Hometown Prosperity Plan" for South Dakota. The pillars include the following:

First, "Promoting Partnerships," which means encouraging even more cooperation and less competition among states within our region, among towns and organizations within South Dakota, with Indian Country and among leaders at all levels;

Second, "Emphasizing Entrepreneurship," which means placing a greater emphasis on nurturing start-up businesses so we can grow from within;

Third, "Investing in the Public Good," which means nudging private investment toward sectors that benefit South Dakota, and funding federal investments that earn positive returns in the form of community benefits; and

Fourth, "Protecting Pocketbooks," which means taking action against rising energy costs, rising health-care costs, stagnant wages, and other things that squeeze finances and sap our economic strength.

Economic development is a "lynchpin" issue in the sense that strengthening our economy leads to progress on many other issues -- generating additional resources for education, reducing crime rates, and making it easier for people to provide for their families. This is why economic development is worth focusing on, and it is one of the reasons I developed this plan.

As a member of both the Senate Budget Committee and the Appropriations Committee, I will help determine funding levels for many federal programs that impact South Dakota. In addition, I will have the opportunity to seek "earmark" funding for specific projects in our state. We're also making preparations for a new farm bill, which sets policy not just for agriculture, but for rural development more generally. Together, these and other upcoming legislative developments will present me with opportunities to impact economic development in South Dakota from the federal level.

We have already made considerable progress on economic development, and I believe the strategies detailed in my plan represent a promising proposal for building on that progress.

I appreciate the suggestions and ideas from the many people who helped to develop this plan, and I look forward to continuing our work together as we seek to implement its components.

I encourage people to take a look at the detailed plan on my website at http://johnson.senate.gov and continue to send in their ideas.

By "promoting partnerships," "emphasizing entrepreneurship," "investing in the public good," and "protecting pocketbooks," I know we can bring even greater prosperity to the communities that South Dakotans call home.

They don't want Indians praying at Bear Butte

Dear Editor:

This letter is regarding the Meade County Commissioners decision to approve the alcohol application of Mr. Jay Allen who proposes to build a 22,500 sq foot bar, 155,000 square foot asphalt parking lot, and an amphitheater to seat 30,000 near Bear Butte.

Bear Butte is a Sacred Mountain to our Lakota People and many other Native Nations. We pray there, learn there, and receive healing there. Bear Butte is our church, school, and hospital.

While some people may believe that since there is no development actually ON THE MOUNTAIN, it is okay to build nearby. However, elected officials such as the Commissioners have a responsibility not only to the people who vote candidates into office, but to people everywhere who depend on the judgment of officials to take care of social responsibility.

There are laws in place all over the United States which protect the integrity of churches, schools and hospitals. The Meade County Commissioners have the power to demand by example that all people, businesses, organizations, and governments show their respect for a Sacred Mountain by their ability to enact a vote of No to Mr. Allen's application.

This is a great responsibility that the Meade County Commissioners have. The eyes and ears of the whole country and many other nations watch their action regarding this issue.

Through my work with Treaty Councils in Lakota Country and at the United Nations regarding the Rights of Indigenous Peoples', I know that the Lakota People and many other Native Nations have the inalienable Human Right to pray at sacred places.

This Human Right becomes denied when the decision-makers approve of action, which in essence, sanctions the desecration of sacred places.

Many people urged the Commissioners to consider the future when making decisions, to think of the coming generations of not only Lakota People and other Native Nations, but of Meade County residents' grandchildren and great-grandchildren, as well.

A good leader is visionary for his people, and for all people, who will be effected by his decision making. Bear Butte is a sacred place, it is a National Historic Site, it is a State Park, and the nearby Bear Butte Lake is a National Wildlife Refuge. With such highly esteemed designations, the Meade County Commissioners had all these reasons, these good reasons, to vote in such a manner as to protect and preserve Bear Butte for the people of today and generations to come.

Many of us attending the April 4, 2006 hearing urged the Commissioners to take courage and vote for the environment, the natural balance of Creation, the coming generations. We urged them to stand together as a Commission against the powerful raging money machine that often drives small towns into making disastrous, regrettable decisions, that in the end benefit no one except the one capitalist owner and the recipients of the pitifully-few dollars he/she may spread around town while taking home the millions, violating the rights of others, contaminating the environment and the society impacted by the driving force of wanting to make the dollar, in disregard for the destruction he leaves behind for others to clean up and suffer from.

Indeed, as elected officials, the Commissioners must be aware that the decision to allow Mr. Allen the one tool he needs to make a profit from his endeavor, will in fact, result in great suffering for the Lakota people and other Native Nations who need and cherish Bear Butte, as well as environmentalists who respect Bear Butte for the special place that it is. Isn't 60 bars enough?

Indigenous People all over the world, and environmentalists all over the world, could have celebrated the Commission's decision to protect and preserve the Sacred Mountain, Bear Butte, if the vote was to tell Mr. Allen, "No, the location of your establishment is inappropriate for an alcohol license. Such a location would be damaging to too many people, too many generations, too many species of the environment.

Your application is denied." However, the decision was to approve Mr. Allen's alcohol-license application. The power was there for the Commission to enact an honorable decision, yet without any discussion, the vote was unanimous to approve. Many people, including residents of Meade County, feel the Commission's action was not only dishonorable, but premeditated.

The decision did not surprise many, for not many expected to receive justice in the Meade County Courthouse. Yet, the construction of Mr. Allen's bar has been halted, for the moment, by the many days and nights of falling rain, hail, sleet, and snow; by a power greater than the Commission.

On the mind of many people at the rally and the hearing was the remembrance that April 4 was the anniversary of the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., who said "The ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort, but where he stands in times of challenges and controversy."

The world watching that day certainly saw where the Meade County Commissioners stood, and now understand the ultimate measure of these men as individuals and as a collective. Who do they represent? Many residents are against further destruction of the environment of Bear Butte.

The many people who marched on Sturgis, closing down Highway 34, included several Traditional Healers (Medicine Men), elders, Treaty Councils, many Sun Dance Societies, Headsmen, Matriarchs, elders, school children, high school and college students and faculty, Warrior Societies, United States military Veterans, elect-

Food doesn't look the same

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I don't want to be an alarmist, as they say, but the fried foods that taste so good are giving us diabetes and killing us. I don't want to say that Lakota people are most susceptible to diabetes because I am not a scientist, but I can say that all of us simply need to get more exercise and eat healthy.

As one gets older, I think we slowly begin to realize that the food we put into our bodies is certainly at the heart of many of the good and bad things that happen in our lifetime. I always think that if I could look back at my life or re-do it, I would be a vegetarian or something. I think tunkasila should let me have a "do over" when it comes to being reincarnated as I think I know how to eat healthy.

It is too bad that it takes a lifetime to learn that not all things are healthy for us. I used to read food labels years ago and avoided the fat content and lately I have taken up that habit as my son is a big kid and he's also learning to eat healthy. There have been many times in my life where I enjoyed big fat juicy cheeseburgers and french fries, but now I know that just one serving probably contains all of an adult daily allowance of fat intake.

I think it takes not only desire and education to learn about the unhealthy effects of those foods and drinks that are not good for us, but also time, experience and simply living life. When I was a young man, I didn't give much thought to eating healthy and just what that meant. Most of our favorite food stuffs tastes so good, it is hard to start 'today' with our diet plans.

As I noted before, if I knew what I know now about the beneficial effects of simply drinking a lot of water, I would have drank gallons. Actually, the recommended intake of water seems to be around eight glasses and that probably amounts to close to a half-gallon. A couple of my health issues centered around the need to drink more water in my life and I kind of dropped the ball because I didn't. Now days, there is a lot of information out there on the Internet and in the newspapers about how to maintain a health lifestyle.

Most of the information that recommends a healthy lifestyle could be summarized briefly, yet, it would be a good guide for most of us. The experts recommend no smoking, no alcohol and at least 30 minutes of exercise 4-5 times a week in addition to eating a balanced diet. Most of the recommend tips are meant to be accomplished in moderation and not in an extreme way. For example, when cholesterol is broken down into good and bad and our bodies need both. It is kind of confusing, but apparently our bodies need the good fat as well.

What is a challenge for most us is to pay attention to those food labels as we purchase our food and that can be time consuming. Also, many of the fast foods establishments on the reservation do not publish the fat content of their food because they are not equipped to calculate that figure as it would take time. One could actually estimate what that would be if served in exact proportions, but then again it is time consuming.

The other issue is financial, as many healthy foods which are labeled "whole wheat" or "organically grown" are sometimes too expensive for most of us. Most of us simply cannot expand our budgets to include those things, which are good for our families. In that case, I think that we do have to make an effort to buy only those things that are low fat as most products now days have a very distinct label, which lists the "Nutrition Facts."

Despite a couple of health issues, which have accompanied me, I never smoked cigarettes or drank alcohol and those two positive risk factors have helped me to journey this far in life. Each time I sit down to my favorite food of fried chicken, mashed potatoes, beef stew, or pasta I have to remind myself that "moderation" is a watch word that I can never forget. What my son and I do a lot of times is we order a meal and share it. This works especially well with a chef salad which are usually fairly good size. Also, eating out is expensive no matter where you go and this practice cuts down on the final bill and we manage to come away feeling that we didn't stuff ourselves.

ed officials, ikce wicasa and winyan (common men and women), drum groups; bikers from several states, South Dakota Senators and Congressional Representatives, Civil Liberty Attorneys, church groups, Tribal Police, and local and Black Hills area residents. We engaged in a collective action. We stood in solidarity.

At the Protect and Preserve Bear Butte Rally the Lakota and other Tribal Nations, and our many brothers and sisters of all races and walks of life stood together in solidarity with one prayer, to protect and preserve Bear Butte. The prayer strengthened the people, which was in the heart of those who organized the Rally: Intertribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte, Lakota Action Network, Owe Aku (Bring Back the Way), Mennonite Central Committee, Bear Butte International Alliance. We all understood that the Commission is guided by a system of oppression, the capitalist system.

Some felt that the Commission was also guided by another system of oppression, racism. We understood that environmental racism (policies/laws which most greatly impact a group of people-Lakota and other tribes, in this case) would also probably rear its' ugly head, and it did.

Yet, we recalled the words of Martin Luther King, Jr., who said "Our lives begin to end the day we become silent about things that matter." We could not be silent that day, we had to make a stand for our Sacred Mountain.

It was a peaceful stand, there were no arrests, not criminal behavior, no riot broke out. The Lakota Security (Warrior Society) on duty that day protected the Rally participants, and kept a firm hand on the crowd at all times. The only people who got out of hand were the towns folk peeking out of stores who yelled insults at our youth. We did not throw insults back, our voice was our March and our Rally, and we were not silent that day when we made a stand for our Sacred Mountain and our Way of Life.

Our work is not done, we will continue to resist the desecration of Bear Butte. April 4 was just the beginning of our resistance. We will continue to make a stand for our Human Right to pray, for our Sacred Mountain, with the establishment of an encampment, with Opening Ceremonies on July 4 at Bear Butte.

We will camp there with our Tribal Nations, organizations, and societies, and our allies will join us.

We will have a peaceful Gathering of Nations to Defend Bear Butte. In this organized resistance to the desecration of our Sacred Mountain, and the accompanying destruction to our Way of Life, we will host many learning experiences from traditional medicine and food to international Human Rights law.

The Meade County Commissioners have stated that they are concerned and worried about so many "Indians coming to town."

We wonder why they do not worry about the drunken, drugged tourists, a higher crime rate, enormous mounds of trash, people urinating in the ditches because there are not enough toilets for half a million people, increased police calls, and the many social problems testified to by county residents at the hearing (not to stereo-type the bikers, just repeating the residents' testimony!).

We wonder why the Commission would choose to be faced with such an outcome, but they don't want Indians praying at Bear Butte?

Notes From Indian Country

Living in a Red Day

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Terri Blue is her family name and so is White Eyes. But if you put the names together as she does sometimes, it comes out Terri Blue White Eyes. Hmmmm!

Anyway, however she writes her name there should be room in there for "Dynamic." That's right - dynamic or maybe "Devoted." For more than 20 years she has spent her life providing health care to the sick and those consumed by the double scourges of drugs and alcohol.

"You can blame it all on my Mom because she was a health care worker and it sort of trickled down to me. I remember when she worked at the Health Clinic in Los Angeles and I was there to learn from her," Blue said.

Her mother, Juanita White Eyes and her brothers and sisters, were students at Holy Rosary Indian Mission on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota when I attended school there. Her uncle Carl White Eyes was about my age and we were pretty good friends at the mission school. Juanita is now 80 years old and according to Ms. Blue, "she is still running around getting things done."

Ms. Blue is the Director of Anpetu Luta Otipi (Living in a Red Day), an Oglala Sioux Tribe Comprehensive Substance Abuse Program. The program started out many years ago as Project Phoenix but has since merged to form the one program. Her office and staff is located just outside of Kyle on the No Flesh Road. It is also a residence that houses beds for 10 inpatients.

"I've put in 20 years with the program, but one of my staff members, Peggy Janis, has been here for 23 years," Blue said.

The Indian Health Service funds the program and when I asked Ms. Blue if they were supportive, she replied, "They say they are." She was very concerned about the lack of support from the State of South Dakota. "The state will not recognize our credentials as certified alcohol and drug counselors and we feel excluded because in order to get recognized by them we have to attend their special training program and since we are Lakota and use our own traditional and cultural values to heal our people, we just do not fit in with the state regulations at times," she said.

Ms. Blue believes in teaching her clients about living in balance. "We don't follow a 12-step program, but instead we have a traditional concept we call The Seven Directions. We try to help our clients with their mental, physical and spiritual self," she said.

Anpetu Luta Otipi gets as many as 900 referrals a year. Of those that are accepted into the program about 90 percent are considered residential patients. "All of our staff are certified alcohol and drug counselors and the biggest problem we face on this reservation is alcoholism," Ms. Blue said.

Because of space and funding shortages the program has alternating cycles of 30 days for the youth and 30 days for the adults in the residential program Ms. Blue is particularly proud of the support given her program by the Lakota people in her community. "Our clients have to remain alcohol and substance free for one year before they can come to us and offer their help as volunteers," she said.

But because the reservation is a small community patients often return to the same situations and lifestyles that brought them to the program in the first place. "Recidivism is very high, about 85 percent and we are really trying to create a new approach, a paradigm shift if you will," Blue said.

The program has helped youngsters fighting alcohol related problems as young as 10-years-old. "We had to sneak in the 10-year-old's, because the program is designed to help people from age 12 on up. Two thirds of our clients are male, but we do get a lot of women referred to us from the Department of Social Services. These women have been abused or have become alcohol and substance dependent and have lost custody of their children," Blue said.

"We have a hard time convincing the state government that our program has to emphasize Lakota values. Traditional Lakota values like generosity, wisdom, courage, respect and bravery guide all aspects of the program," Blue said. "Our philosophy includes the belief that the Lakota people have endured hundreds of years of grief, pain and loss. Our people have learned to cope with this loss through the use of drugs and alcohol," Blue believes.

"It's been a long, hard fight for us at Anpetu Luta Otipi, but we are determined to cure the serious addictions that have plagued our people for much too long and sometimes we have to cry along with them, but we try to lend them our strength to heal themselves," Blue said.

The color "red" reflects the path many Lakota travel when they are living good and productive lives. It reflects the Good Red Road they walk upon and those who come to Terri Blue White Eyes for help are looking for a new life that will bring them to "Living in a Red Day," the Lakota equivalent of "One Day at a Time."

Anyone wishing to help this wonderful program survive can call 605-455-2331 or write to: Anpetu Luta Otipi, P.O. Box 275, Kyle, SD 57752. With funds from the Indian Health Service cut for this year, Terri and her loyal staff need all of the financial assistance they can get.

A column for and about women veterans

Worried about my daughter's behavior

Dear SAS: My daughter just got back from Iraq last year. I can tell that something is bothering her but she won't talk to me about it. When I try to ask her, she gets angry and tells me to mind my own business. This is not how we used to be. We had a good relationship and she used to talk about everything with me. When I suggested that maybe a counselor could help, she really got mad. I feel like she is hurting. What can I do?

Answer: It is good that you are concerned for your daughter and are reaching out for help. It appears that there are two types of expectations here. You have the expectation of closeness that once was in place. For your daughter, after serving in the military, her sense of things has changed. Let's try to step into her shoes first to see what we can learn.

You say she is hurting and we do not know if she is hurting physically or emotionally. You do say that she is not willing to talk about things.

Soldiers learn that they only talk about their experiences on a need to know basis. For example, during war they learn they are only to talk about missions to others in their unit. When soldiers return home, they do not share openly with family even though they are no longer on the "missions" of military life. Many will continue to feel that they can only be comfortable talking with others who have also been in combat. At home they may miss the closeness of their combat buddies because they feel that no one else can understand them now. When a family member tries to ask questions, like you did out of concern, the veteran may think you are trying to pry into her affairs. Another consideration is that she is trying to protect you. If she had some terrible experiences, she is going to be reluctant to tell you out of respect for your feelings. She will not want to place more worry on you. This will be particularly true if re-deployment is a possibility. She may also feel that she has to continue to "keep her stuff together" because if she breaks down she might worry about her ability to continue to be an effective soldier.

The other thing to keep in mind is that your daughter may still be in the habit of controlling her emotions-something that was absolutely critical in combat. The one emotion that was allowed and encouraged was anger. Anger can be used as a motivator, and certainly is used as a form of self expression.

It may be that your daughter wishes she could tell you some things, but feels she can't. She feels frustrated and her anger is a product of her frustration. Her anger may also be her way to try to get you to quit asking questions. Again, it is because she does not want to let you know her struggles so you won't worry. Either way, you feel that she is withdrawing from you. Since she is your daughter, that may make you feel like you need to reach out to her more, so you ask more often. Unfortunately the result is that the strain increases, which is what you described in your letter.

Top Ten reasons for the week

This week's topic is:

TOP 10 'YOU KNOW WHEN YOU ARE A TRIBAL EMPLOYEE WHEN:'

1. You don't officially start working in the morning till you've read all your emails.

2. Not only do you know all the security guards, and janitors you're related to them too.

3. Your version of a conference call is when you call your cousin, friends and plan the weekend basketball/powwow/rodeo plans.

4. The only time your man/woman/snag picks you up from work is on payday.

5. You have pictures on the wall.

6. Before calling in sick, you rehearse your sick voice and sick story several times out loud so it's not so obvious you're hung-over.

7. Your kid's school supplies all came from the tribal supply department.

8. You call in sick on payday, then send your cousin to pick up your check. (That's real rezzed)

9. You contribute $1 to the Tribal Christmas Party, pile on your plate AND take three plates home for your family.

10. Your co-workers know not to expect you at work the day after payday.

11. You tell your creditors your "not in the office" when they call at work.

12. Your kids call your work and say, "Let me speak to my mom" and the co-workers knows who its for.

Outstanding students honored at 27th annual reservation awards banquet

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

WOLF CREEK - On Monday evening at Wolf Creek School, students, school board, faculty and staff members joined parents, community members and tribal officials to honor the top eighth graders and seniors from across Pine Ridge Reservation. In honor of the memory of Dick Hagen, a long time elected official from Pine Ridge who was committed to public service and our youth, the Porcupine School Student Council was presented with the "Outstanding Student Leadership" award honoring Cody Young, Alphonso Pawnee Leggings, Kimberly Standing Soldier and Charles White Eyes.

"We are here to recognize our youth, our outstanding students," said tribal president, Cecelia Fire Thunder, "but we need to recognize the parents, the grandparents or significant adults who have played a major role in the success of our students - our children cannot do well or succeed without parents or grandparents standing behind them."

Rianna Albers, a senior at Red Cloud, won the 12th grade academic award. Albers was named a Gates Scholar earlier this month and chose to enroll at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis rather than Georgetown. Also nominated for the award was Sadie In The Woods/Little Wound, Robert Janis/Pine Ridge and Evangeline Poor Bear/Crazy Horse.

In 12th grade athletics, TyAnn Pourier of Little Wound edged out Johnny Crow of Red Cloud, Deana Big Crow of Pine Ridge and Jay Romero of Crazy Horse. Honoring the memory of Bill Cuny, long time educator, Charles Janis of Pine Ridge was honored for the Bill Cuny Citizenship award. Brandi Shortman of Red Cloud and Louis Kills Straight were also nominated. Janis plans on majoring in criminal justice at Chadron State and play sports for the NCAA Division II school.

The night's 12th grade extracurricular award was presented to Jessica Helper of Pine Ridge. Anna Diaz of Red Cloud and Binki Malik of Little Wound were also nominated.

Tom Vocu, a past Shannon County school board member and current staff member at Wolf Creek School was the MC for the 27th annual recognition banquet. DD and the Fayrohs, a rock nostalgia dance band that plays throughout the black Hills area, provided the entertainment for the evening.

Stephanie Clifford from Batesland was selected as the eighth grade academic award winner. Virginia Little Crow/American Horse, Brianna Randall/Crazy Horse, Brennan Montgomery/Little Wound, Brent Spoonhunter/Loneman, Megan Yellow Boy/Our Lady of Lourdes, Lacy Pourier/Pine Ridge, Daylon Black Bull/Porcupine, Amber Running Hawk/Red Cloud, Alan Jealous/Rockyford, Tyrell Tayle/Wolf Creek and Lacy Colhoff/Wounded Knee District school were also nominated.

"Our children represent the human capital for the future," concluded Fire Thunder, "in just the way we have representatives from each of the schools here tonight, we need to have all of the schools sit down and work together on how we may do this better, learn from each other and get the job done - each of our high school seniors should finish school with a plan; this is an exciting time, we have so many beautiful, hard working and creative young people coming up!"

Air ambulances will be based on Pine Ridge, Rosebud, will save time

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Isolated American Indians soon will be closer to emergency health care through a plan to put air ambulances on reservations nationwide.

The first airplanes will be on the Pine Ridge and Rosebud reservations in South Dakota by July, then Fort Berthold in North Dakota.

The goal is to reduce the time it takes to get a patient to a hospital that can provide a level of care not available in rural areas.

"If we can start saving hours ... we can start saving lives," Tex Hall, chairman of the Inter-Tribal Economic Alliance, said Wednesday at the announcement in Sioux Falls.

It now can take three or four hours for some patients to get to a hospital because the air ambulance first must fly from its hospital to the reservation and then back to the hospital.

Hall's coalition of tribes is working with PassNet of Plymouth, Minn., which secured investors and plans to put fixed-wing airplanes on 50 reservations over the next five years and cut that time, its CEO, John Warnock, said.

"We want to roll this out one station a month," he said.

Funding for the flights will come from the federal programs under which the patients are covered: Medicare, Medicaid, Indian Health Services and the Veterans Administration, Warnock said.

Cecelia Fire Thunder, Oglala Sioux Tribe president, said the service will allow patients to be taken immediately to a burn unit, for example, instead of local and regional hospitals first.

The airplanes also will be used to fly in specialists so people can be cared for on the reservation, which will keep that money from going elsewhere, said Fire Thunder, whose tribal members live on the huge Pine Ridge reservation in southwestern South Dakota.

We're going to be able to bring the experts in," she said.

Rep. Paul Valandra, D-Mission, a member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, mentioned the need to Warnock in December. The Rosebud and Pine Ridge health committees and tribal councils have since approved it, and the planes are scheduled to be in service by summer.

"This group moves at warp speed," Warnock said.

Valandra said the state also will save Medicaid money because of the ability to shop around for the best rates and specialties.

Warnock said fixed-wing airplanes will be used instead of helicopters because they cost a third less to operate, are faster and can fly in inclement weather.

He said that in 2003, he dislodged a piece of food from his 4-year-old son's throat, and the seven minutes it took paramedics to arrive seemed like an eternity.

"I can't imagine what it's like to hold a child's hand for four hours," Warnock said.

Hall, chairman of the Three Affiliated Tribes in Fort Berthold, N.D., is also former president of the National Congress of American Indians. The Inter-Tribal Economic Alliance, which he now runs, is a national coalition of Indian tribes, Alaska natives and native Hawaiians.

RST council representative Scott Herman completing graduate degree

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

MISSION - During a day and age when many tribal nations are debating the merits of requiring tribal council representatives to earn academic credentials, Rosebud Sioux tribal councilman, Scott Herman, is closing in on the completion of his thesis for a master's degree in Educational Leadership from Oglala Lakota College in Kyle.

Representing District 3, Antelope community, Herman has been studying for his graduate degree in a consistent and dedicated manner, despite having to commute west to the Pine Ridge reservation over the last couple of years. His persistence will pay off next month with commencement exercises and then, this fall he will be working in some capacity of program or school administration in return for the grant funding which paid for his tuition, books and related costs.

Scott Herman

It is common knowledge that many of the legal, social, and economic issues that tribal councils are charged with require some academic and practical experience to comprehend and act on. Many RST council meetings are broadcast over KINI FM radio and the listening audience is able to acquire a sense of the range of issues that the council must wrestle with on a monthly basis. Issues such as housing, public health issues, and managing the tribe's land and natural resources can be a challenge.

It appears that outside specialists or consultants are often relied upon and contracted with when a rather complicated issue is encountered. Educating tribal members close to home and equipping them with such knowledge may be a way to cut back on such related cost as tribal members gain specialized knowledge themselves.

Herman is a 1985 graduate of Todd County High School and went on to enroll at Sinte Gleska University and successfully earned a Bachelor of Science in elementary education in 1993. He was employed as an elementary teacher at Rosebud Elementary school in the Todd County School District from 1993 to 2005 and taught grades 2nd, 3rd and 4th. He completed his required OLC administrative internship experience at South Elementary school.

He enrolled in the OLC leadership program in 2004 and has stayed on track in meeting academic progress toward degree completion and, in fact, will be matriculating during OLC's commencement ceremonies on June 25 at the college's powwow grounds, the site of the 2006 commencement.

When asked to comment about his commitment to the graduate degree program and the dedication and commuting involved in meeting degree requirements Herman said, "I had a really good cohort group who kept me going when the going got tough! You have to have a true commitment to completing, the traveling back and forth was tough but I knew that when I finished it would be worth it."

He previously served as an Antelope council representative from 2001 to 2003 and was re-elected by the community in 2005 for a second two-year term.

Herman's parents are longtime Antelope residents Parnell and Sally Herman and his children are Kellan and Kelsie.

Herman's future plans are to complete his term on the council and look for an administrative position in some capacity in the education field.

Shakopee grants to Oglala Nation $39.2 million for projects

Cangleska, Inc. receives $500,000 for shelter

PRIOR LAKE, Minn. - The Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community has awarded a $500,000 grant to the Oglala Sioux Tribe of South Dakota for Cangleska, Inc., a tribal organization which provides domestic violence and sexual assault prevention and intervention programming. Since 1989 Cangleska has served the members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, operating two shelters, one on the Pine Ridge Reservation and one in Rapid City, South Dakota. In addition to providing safe space for women who have been battered and their children, Cangleska provides outreach advocacy services, probation services, civil legal services, a men's re-education program, an integrated criminal justice system, and coordinated response and training. Cangleska also operates Sacred Circle, a national resource center providing technical assistance, consultation, and training to Indian Tribes and organizations in developing strategies and remedies to end violence against Native women. The grant will help fund a new women's shelter to replace the one on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

"Domestic violence and sexual assault are devastating crimes and is a problem in Native American communities including on the Pine Ridge. As a matter of fact, Native American women are the most victimized group in the United States according to the United States Department of Justice," wrote Oglala President Cecelia Fire Thunder in a letter to the SMSC requesting the grant.

In 2005 the SMSC made a loan for $38 million to the Oglala Sioux Tribe for debt consolidation and an expansion of the Tribe's Prairie Wind Casino and Hotel. In the past the SMSC has also made grants totaling more than $363,700 for projects benefiting the Oglala Sioux Tribe, including $103,700 for trucks and road equipment, $250,000 for the Bennett County Activity Center, and $10,000 for propane tanks for tribal members.

"The members of the Shakopee Mdewakanton Community have made a commitment to help other Tribes recover from historical oppression and the resulting societal problems," said SMSC Chairman Stanley R. Crooks. "It is important for us to help other Tribes whenever we can."

Both the Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community and the Oglala Sioux Tribe are members of the Great Sioux Nation, which consists of seven campfires, including the Mdewakanton and Teton bands of Sioux. The Oglala Sioux Band is one of the seven distinct and sovereign bands of the Teton group. The Oglala Sioux Tribe has approximately 41,000 tribal members of whom about one-half reside on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, a territory that covers over 4,700 square miles in western South Dakota.

The SMSC utilizes its financial resources from gaming and non-gaming enterprises to pay for all of the internal infrastructure of the Tribe, including but not limited to housing, roads, water and sewer systems, emergency services, and essential services to its Tribal members in education, health, and welfare. The Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community has a charitable giving program which comes from a cultural and social tradition to assist those in need. Over the past several years the SMSC has donated more than $56.5 million to charitable organizations and Indian Tribes, including more than $15.7 million in fiscal year 2005. The Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community, a federally recognized Indian Tribe in Minnesota, is the owner and operator of Mystic Lake Casino Hotel, Playworks, Dakotah! Sport and Fitness, The Meadows at Mystic Lake Golf Course, and other enterprises on a reservation south of the Twin Cities.

Firm fined for cheating tribal schools

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - A Texas company has been fined $4.6 million for cheating schools on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation as part of a federal program.

According to authorities, NextiraOne LLC of Houston inflated equipment prices, submitted false invoices and failed to install and deliver some services and equipment.

The firm was involved in a Federal Communications Commission program that provides Internet access and other telecommunications services to economically disadvantaged schools and libraries.

Under a plea agreement, NextiraOne will pay a $1.9 million criminal fine.

A civil settlement requires the company to forfeit more than $2.6 million for uncompensated work at other school districts.

Veterans benefits fair held at Rosebud

One of kind for South Dakota reservations

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The Department of Veterans Affairs Dakota Regional office and the South Dakota's VA Medical centers held a veteran's compensation and benefits fair April 25-27 at the Rosebud Sioux Tribe veterans affairs building. The fair was apparently the first of its kind held in South Dakota. The dates were announced on KINI FM radio and the opening day saw Richard Iyotte, KINI station manager interviewing several people connected with the event.

A press release noted, "A VA disability examiner will be available to provide compensation and pension examinations along with VA Rating Board specialist to adjudicate certain disability and pension claims.

A flag raising ceremony was held on opening day and RST president Rodney M. Bordeaux initiated the event with an opening statement. RST council representative Russell Eagle Bear also spoke along with a blessing by Sicangu medicine man Roy Stone, Sr. Joe White Buffalo and group sang the honor songs.

On the first day, 39 veterans signed up to inquire about benefits eligibility, while the second day saw 19 veterans and on the last day the number were smaller.

The Rosebud Sioux Tribe, which authorized the event by tribal resolution, worked in cooperation with the Indian Health Service and the VA. It was a way in which veterans and their dependents could apply for VA benefits and information at one location and in some cases be notified about their eligibility in one day.

Shortly after arriving, a veteran is asked to sign in and is directed to one of several tables being manned by VA personnel. Looking around the room there were tables with signs representing the congressional delegation, the Black Hills Health Care Systems (VA), the S.D. Disable Veterans of America, the American Legion and the Paralyzed Veterans of America. The Social Security Administration was also available to accept claims.

Art Honomicl, an enrolled tribal member of the Yankton Sioux, served as the coordinator of the event. He is employed by the VA in Sioux Falls as a VA rating specialist and minority veterans program coordinator. He worked closely with RST veterans affairs director, Orlando Morrison, to bring several VA employees to the Rosebud.

Morrison said, "To have the VA and different support organizations, and a VA doctor here and to adjudicate a claim in one day is beyond belief."

He was referring to the fact that three veterans had qualified for a pension that they were not previously aware of and the process had been decided in one day through the efforts of the rating specialist. Another veteran was eligible to receive an increase of upgrade in his benefits on this day.

Honomicl said, "We are trying to have a benefits fair on each reservation in South Dakota. We want to have at least two each year and next year we will hold it in Sisseton." What makes the benefits fair unique is that the VA does not conduct outreach programs in other communities in quite the same manner.

On the Rosebud reservation, there are reportedly around 1,100 veterans who qualify for veterans benefits and services. There is an effort by former RST council representative Lenard "Shadow" Wright to create a database that accurately portrays the number of veterans actually residing on the Rosebud. The purpose is to have the information available so that veterans could be better served by the veterans affairs program, while keeping them up-to-date as to the latest benefits that are available to them.

Morrison noted that veterans as a group are sometimes non-responsive when it comes to efforts to count them. Many have had experiences with the government that have caused them to be suspicious of government intrusion in their life and would simply like to be left alone. He said, "For the first time, it was good. We are not going to get everyone the first time as many do not trust the government."

For Native veterans, this distrust of the government is likely compounded by the often contentious relationship that respective tribal nations have had throughout the ages with the federal government.

Charlie Quinn, originally from the Rosebud reservation and now living in Lower Brule has been a VA veterans benefits representative for 15 years and was in attendance. He said he trains county and veterans service officers in assisting with veterans claims. Jack Moore of the White Eagle Christian Academy of Mission also stopped by to visit with VA personnel about a potential claim. Archie Hopkins of Kyle, a county veterans service officer for Shannon County also took advantage of the outreach services as he consulted with VA personnel.

The veterans benefits fair was a great idea and outreach service to the Sicangu veterans and the hope is that there will be more like this one for veterans in the future as there are some vital services that veterans have access to. Many veterans could also be seen signing for veterans medical eligibility and that is an important one for all veterans.

Federal appeals court rejects Leonard Peltier jurisdiction appeal

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) _ The government had the right to prosecute American Indian activist Leonard Peltier for crimes that occurred on a South Dakota reservation, a federal appeals court has ruled.

Peltier is serving two consecutive life sentences for the deaths of two FBI agents during a 1975 standoff near Oglala, on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

He has filed numerous appeals since he was convicted by a jury in Fargo in 1977.

In the latest appeal, Peltier and his lawyers argued that federal courts have no jurisdiction over Indian land.

U.S. District Judge Ralph Erickson ruled last summer that the government has the right to prosecute and imprison anyone who kills federal agents, no matter where the crime occurs.

Peltier appealed that decision to the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The appeals court upheld Erickson's ruling Friday.

``Killing a federal officer engaged in his or her official duties affects the federal government's ability to execute its laws and is thus an offense that the United States can punish,'' wrote Judge Morris Arnold in the decision.

Barry Bachrach, Peltier's lawyer, said Friday afternoon that he hadn't yet told his client about the latest decision.

``We are disappointed and we're just going to keep moving forward with the issues to correct this injustice,'' he said.

The Pine Ridge shootout left three people dead amid battles between federal agents and the American Indian Movement in the 1970s.

FBI agents Ronald Williams and Jack Coler were shot in the head at point-blank range. The Justice Department concluded that an FBI sniper killed AIM member Joseph Stuntz.

Peltier has claimed the FBI framed him, which the agency denies.

His supporters said he was treated unfairly because of his political activism.

Sen. Johnson asks Bush budget nominee for water funds

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) _ U.S. Sen. Tim Johnson met Thursday with President Bush's pick to lead the Office of Management and Budget and tried to make funding for two South Dakota water projects a priority with the White House.

Johnson is a member of the Senate Budget Committee, which will oversee the confirmation process of Rob Portman, a former six-term Republican congressman from Ohio who now serves as U.S. trade representative.

Johnson, D-S.D., said he used the meeting to reiterate the congressional delegation's request to increase funding for the Lewis and Clark and Mni Wiconi water projects.

``We've got to finish up what we've got. Otherwise we'll never get them done. I think he appreciated that,'' Johnson told The Associated Press, reiterating his message to Portman.

In his budget request for the 2007 budget year, President Bush recommended $21 million for the Lewis and Clark water system _ $6 million more than the year before but short of the $53 million requested.

The system is a partnership of 15 cities and five rural water districts in South Dakota, Iowa and Minnesota that would get treated water from wells near the Missouri River. The biggest customer is Sioux Falls.

The Mni Wiconi project is designed to deliver water to about 55,000 people in nine West River counties, Pine Ridge and on the Lower Brule and Rosebud Indian reservations.

It's set to receive $22.9 million in construction money in the 2007 budget.

Chas Jewett leads Living Wage rally

RAPID CITY - Chas Jewett, Cheyenne River, and organizer for the Sierra Club and Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe member, led the Smart Growth Coalition in support of the Universal Living Wage Campaign on tax day, April 17.

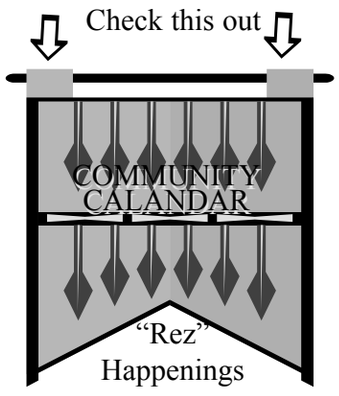
A group of about 20 volunteers joined and greeted taxpayers as they made their last-minute returns at the Rapid City Post Office.

The Universal Living Wage Campaign in Rapid City was one of 100 held simultaneously at post offices in all 50 states. It was the fifth annual Universal Living Wage tax day event.

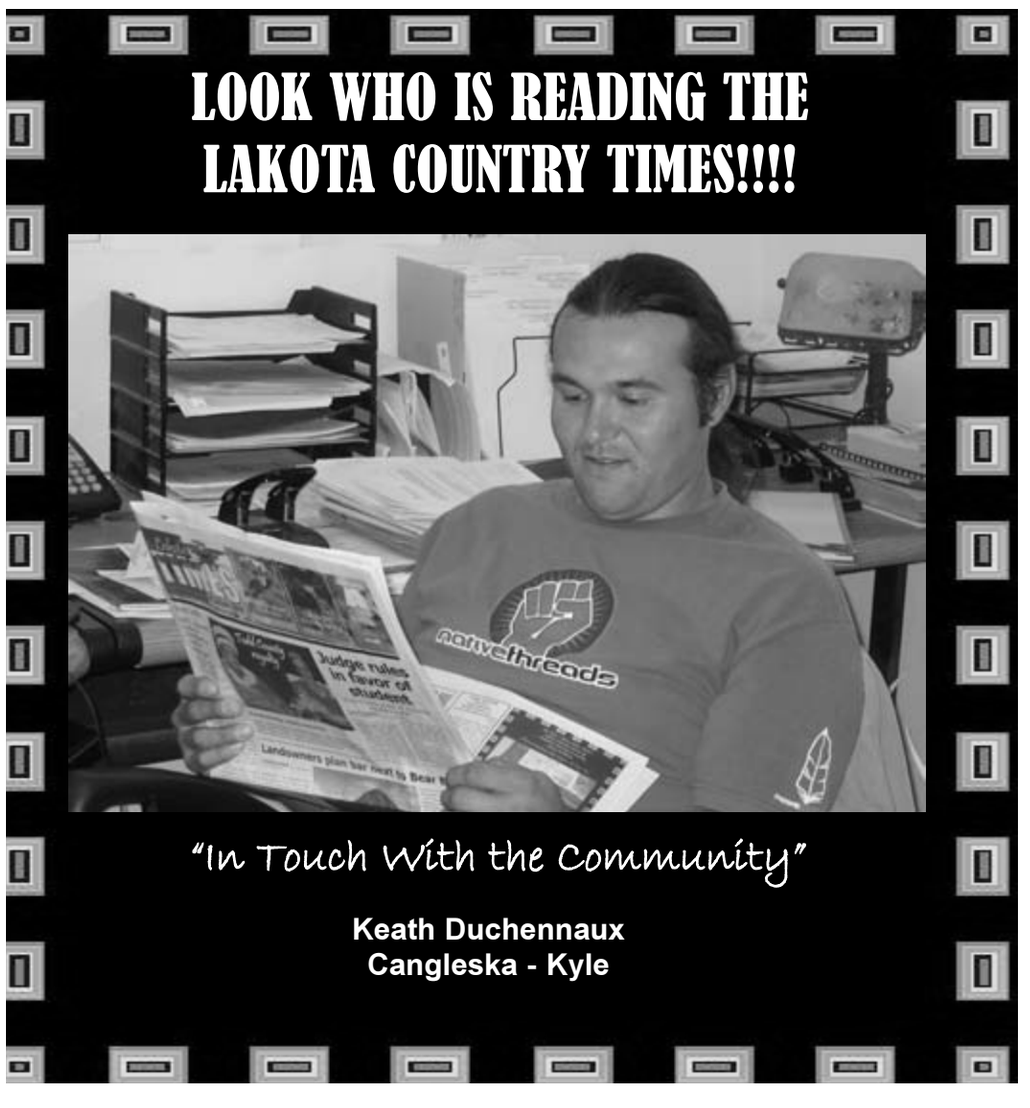
The Smart Growth Coalition joined with 1,460 businesses, unions, religious groups, including the Center for Community Change, the National Council of Churches, the National Health Care for the Homeless Council, the National Organization for Women Church Women United, United for a Fair Economy, the National Low Income Housing Coalition, American Apparel, Communication Workers of America, Service Employees International Union/SEIU and Black Veterans for Social Justice, representing 1,000,000 registered voters, to promote the Universal Living Wage Campaign.

Jewett, who coordinated the Native Vote Project in South Dakota two years ago for the Northern Plains Tribal Voter Education Project, began organizing for a living wage in December 2005. In February, Janet Robideau, executive director, Montana Peoples Action and Indian Peoples Action and a Northern Cheyenne tribal member, presented in Rapid City on the Living Wage campaign that she had successfully led in Missoula, Mont. Jewett was able to bring together the Cowboy Indian Alliance, the Democracy in Action women's group, conservationist and local unions as part of the Smart Growth Coalition supporting a living wage.

Nationally, American business has grown to rely on government subsidies to pick up that portion of the wage that they have failed to provide. Workers have been forced, in ever increasing numbers, to depend on food stamps, General Assistance and TANF.



Congress intended these to be emergency, stop-gap measures. Instead, many businesses have used these government supports to meet basic payroll. A national shift is occurring from the business responsibility of paying a "fair wage for a fair day's work" to creating an ever-increasing burden on the taxpayer.



The group emphasized these points with a gigantic 4' x 10' banner that read, "Reduce your Taxes. Support a Universal Living Wage."
Speakers in addition to Jewett included Mike Howe, organizer for the Local Carpenters Union and three candidates for the South Dakota State Legislature: Laurie Wudtke, House candidate from District #35, which comprises a number of Native American voters in the Lakota Homes North Rapid Area; Pam Hemmingsen, candidate for the House and Tom Katus, Senate candidate, both from District #35 representing central Rapid City, comprised of a number of blue-collar workers residing in Robbinsdale. Candidate Katus stated, "Our goal for a living wage in Rapid City is to have the City Council pass an ordinance to encourage all employers to pay their employees at least at the same rate that the City does its employees. Starting wage for City employees is $10 an hour plus benefits. Meanwhile, Wal-Mart brags that its average wage is $10, and more than two-thirds of its employees have no benefits at all because they are part-time workers. We want Wal-Mart and all major employers to pay their employees at least as well as the citizens who are City employees."

Jewett was pleased with the turnout and the many positive responses people made once they found out that taxes would be reduced when living wages were paid, enabling poor people who have been dependent on the government for TANF and food stamps to become tax paying citizens. "Our Smart Growth Coalition is beginning to have real impact on the citizens of Rapid City," she concluded. She was also leader of the recent successful Smart Growth campaign that collected 2,600 signatures to put a referendum on the June 6 ballot to allow the citizens to vote on whether or not they wanted to approve re-zoning from agricultural to general commercial land.

The City Council, by a narrow margin, approved re-zoning, which would allow another Wal-Mart Supercenter to be part of leapfrog sprawling development in the Black Hills. "We simply have to stop this insane sprawl," Jewett said. "Such sprawling out-of-control development desecrates our sacred Black Hills. We are destroying the future of our children and grandchildren. Traditional tribal leaders deliberated seriously on their decisions, as they knew they would impact seven generations.

We Native Americans need to educate our non-Indian friends about both the sacredness of the Black Hills and the sanity of smart growth/living wage development."

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am writing to you out of complete curiosity. I want to have another child and it just hasn't happened yet and I would like to know if you see another child coming into my life anytime soon?

Curious one

Dear Curious One:

I looks as though you will have another child in about one and a half years. At this time, I see a boy. Be patient - the Creator has a better time clock than our human minds do. Good luck to you.

Dear Anna,

Why does this happen to me? How is my future going to turn out? By the end of this year will my baby's dad come back to us?

If so, will everything be alright? If not why? Will he marry and have kids with this girls he assumes he loves? I know I've pushed him away but now I am tired and depressed. Please help with an answer, I have no where to turn as I still love and miss him. Will ever come back to me in the future?

Tired and depressed

Dear Tired and depressed:

You can manipulate him into returning to you (in a way, anyway), mostly just for sex. You are living in a continual thought pattern that is circular, and returns you only to your strong obsession, which does not equal love.

When a man has indicated that he is in love with another - trust what he is telling you. It wasn't an easy conversation to have, so he told you the best way that he could.

If you minipulate him back into your life you will never feel secure in the relationship because deep in your heart you will truly understand that he does not love you in a way that will sustain. You will end up trying very hard to please him but will never manage to make him happy, because he truly doesn't want to be there.

It is a set up for unfaithfulness and abusive behavior. I have found that if a man does not love me there is nothing in the world that I can do to make that happen. Your desperation not to be alone has led you to being dishonest with yourself. You don't clearly regard all the facts and mask them instead with unfulfilled dreams and imaginings. If you feel unhappy now magnify that by 1000 times by being with a mate that you have forced to be with you and doesn't really have the feelings for you that you want him to have.

It is not a matter of how "good" you are, how hard you work, how magnificent your sexual technical lovemaking - or what kind of an ideal person for him you try to make yourself into. You are not ideal for him if he wants someone else, and he should be allowed that in his life. If you truly love someone you would desire more than wanting him for yourself, you would truly want him to be happy.

True love is generous, and you may think that you really love him, but in all truth you just want him. To make matters worse, it is truly not him that you love but a romantic idea of who you are trying to create him to be in your mind. This is not healthy.

I know that you have his child, but there again that was not his idea - it was yours. You can create a friendly relationship with him for the sake of your baby, and for both of your happiness you must let this man go.

A trapped man (or a man that feels trapped) is like a wild animal in too small of a cage. It is cruel.

You would end up blaming him for not meeting your expectations, for going out with his friends, you would accuse him of having affairs, you would accuse him of not loving his child and you would destroy any feeling except anger that he has for you.

He in turn would help you to destroy your self esteem as he reflected back to you the anger and frustration that he feels.

Please let him go, decide to create within yourself a loving woman, graceful in the energy of love and pleasant in her relationship with herself and her friends and family.

Concentrate on learning to take care of yourself.

Find what you really want to do with your life - because no matter what else, with a man or no man, you have to be responsible for yourself and your baby. You are young - you will live a long time, the right man does exist, but not until you are the right woman.

Please look inside yourself, heal your jealousies, be open and honest with yourself in every moment. Know who you are, the good, the terriffic, the graceful, the bad and the ugly. Rid yourself of anger and the desire for revenge.

I know you are sad, but it is a lot less sad right now that it could be if you decide to try to minipulate and then control this man.

If you do not follow what I say the outcome is one that you will survive: You will trap him into your bed, create another obligation from guilt, try and control his every move because of your fear (fear based on truth) that he doesn't love you enough.

He would become angry, a cheater, dishonest, and treat you abusively because of his resentment.

Please don't waste your time on someone that doesn't love you, just wait, heal yourself from the insult you feel and your crushed feelings and go on. Life will get better. We create, by the way, our life entirely ourselves. We draw to ourself what we believe in (in other words, negative people lead negative lives).

Be thankful for your health and grateful for the opportunity you have to create a good and balanced life. I'm telling you in so very many words to simply get over it. By the way, in about two years you will find a man that you love - and surprise - he loves you too. Good luck on your healing journey.

Dear Anna,

Since my years after college, I am involved in the profession that I give a lot of time and dedication to. It became part of my life, gives me satisfaction but takes away a lot of other things. It is a very noble profession, and I feel honored I am involved in it.

I work very hard, have my dreams about greater success, but I know that it depends on so many things. Do you see for me more career recognition?

And the other question, if I may... I have lived in many places, since I left my home. I go back and feel nostalgic still keeping some things there. Also, being recognized professionally over there makes me happy.

Sometimes I think I should move back and settle there; maybe it will be easier there than here, maybe not. At the same time, I expend a lot of effort trying to achieve greater recognition in my new place where I have lived for the last 16 years. What do you foresee for me in the future, if I may ask?

Wondering

Dear Wondering:

You are truly a beautiful person. Everything in your life has been dedicated to helping others while at the same time fulfilling your own desires. The Creator will allow you to live in the "house of acknowledgment" because you are in alignment with the higher good of all, and you have prayed and been heard.

People where you live do recongize your talent, ability and giving nature. However, people expect you to know that they think highly of you and it is contrary to the Lakota way to "gush" over people. You are fortunate if someone says "good job." That simple phrase means so very much more than just those few words.

The sense of success you are looking for is everywhere around you. It is a journey to wisdom to understand that success is an internal feeling and not something you can find in others recognition of you.

Success is a personal assessment, honest and never cruel, utilizing compassion and an understanding of your true nature. It is an internal comfort zone resulting in a good feeling about yourself and your work. Please accept that success is yours and people will better mirror that back towards you.

Your desire to return home is a precursor to that decision. It is not time yet for you to return to home ground, but when it is, don't worry, you will be offered a job (through a relative that tells you about it) that meets your desires for more responsibility, money and recognition. You are wonderful. Shift your perspective to not take yourself for granted - and others will stop taking you for granted.

This does not mean that you are better than anybody else, it just means that you recognize your own ability. It is a fool that doesn't appreciate the gifts that the Creator has offered to them.

Simply put, If a famous musician never recognized and accepted their skill and talent, they would never have been able to share their talent with us.

Enjoy yourself, enjoy your mind, and learn to appreciate life a little bit more.

- - Water Conservation Methods - -

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 5th year of drought conditions and every drop of water is precious. Here are some crucial water conservation measures:

- - Be Water-Wise Outdoors - -

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

- - Be Water-Wise Indoors - -

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

MUMPS

As of April 17, 2006 Nebraska, 92 confirmed and probable cases have been reported to the Nebraska Department of Health (DOH). As of April 29, 2006 IOWA, 975 confirmed, probable, and suspected cases of mumps have been reported to the Iowa Department of Health.

The majority of cases are occurring among persons 18-25 years of age, Many of whom are vaccinated. Additional cases of mumps, possible linked to the Iowa outbreak, are also under investigation in seven neighboring states, including Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, and Wisconsin.

The Iowa Department of Health has identified two (2) persons diagnosed with mumps who were potentially infectious during travel on nine different commercial flights involving two airlines between the timeframe of March 26, 2006 - April 2, 2006. The origin and arrival cities for these flights included Cedar Rapid/ Waterloo, IA; Dallas, TX; Detroit, MI; Bentonville, AR; Minneapolis, MN; St. Louis, MO; Tucson, AZ; and Washington, DC.

Symptoms & Signs

After a 14 to 24 day incubation period, the onset of mumps occurs with chills, headache, anorexia, malaise and a low to moderate grade fever that may last 14 to 24 hours before salivary gland involvement is noted.These symptoms may be absent in mild cases.

Diagnosis

Diagnosis of typical cases during an epidemic is easy; diagnosis of sporadic cases is not.

Prognosis and Prophylaxis

Prognosis is excellent in uncomplicated mumps. Although rarely, a relapse occurs after about 2 weeks, particularly in postpubertal patients; mumps may involve organs other than the salivary glands. Symptoms may precede, accompany, follow, or occur without salivary gland involvement.

Live mumps virus vaccine is the agent of choice for active immunization. This vaccine produces no significant local or systemic reaction and requires only one injection. The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends vaccination (with measles-mumps, rubella) at 12 to 15 months of age and again at entry into grade school or junior high school. Post exposure vaccination does not protect against mumps from that exposure.

Treatment

Treatment is symptomatic. A soft diet reduces pain caused by chewing. Acidic substances (e.g. citrus fruit juices) may also cause discomfort and should be avoided. Analgesics may be used for headache and general malaise.

Vaccination

The current recommendation is that a first dose of MMR be administered at age 12 to 15 months, with a second dose at four to six years. If the second dose is missed it can also be administered during adolescence.

LOWER BRULE - Pine Ridge defeated Lower Brule and Fargo West ROTC teams this past weekend in a Raider Challenge, a team and individual competition between high school junior ROTC squads.

The challenge hosted by Lower Brule high school Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Senior Robert Janis and junior Robin Webber won the individual male and female competitions.

The three day event includes individual cadets competing against a set standard to earn the Raider distinction and then cadets compete in a Raider Challenge team competition against other high school ROTC squads.

In the individual competition, cadets wake up between 4 to 4:30 a.m., have breakfast at 6 am, participate in an eight mile march in under two hours, do push ups, curl ups, pull ups for the boys and flex arm hang for the girls, basketball throw and a two mile run for the boys and a one mile run for the girls.

The team competition included an obstacle course, log sit-ups, log wrestling and a one mile relay with a four cadet team.

"Pine Ridge came in ready to go, they spanked the competition," said Brett "Stoney" Stoneberger, team leader, "we had great participation throughout the year and these results reflect well on our program and the opportunities that our students have to experience and meet a number of challenges that will help prepare each of them for their life after high school."

Overall, 14 students participated in the competition from Pine Ridge with five earning the Raider distinction including Robert Janis, Robin Webber, Coree Short Bear, Brandy Cottier and Dusti Michaud.

The Pine Ridge team also included: DJ Clifford, John Morrison, Gaylen Twiss, Carl Fast Eagle, Leslie Iron Hawk, Alexandria Mousseau, Yvonne Merrival, Tara White and Susanne Schultze.

Voting rights lawsuit reinstated against City of Martin

Pearl Cottier and Rebecca Three Stars

MARTIN - PIERRE - The U.S. Court of Appeals heard the case of Cottier and Three Stars v. the city of Martin on May 5 in which the plaintiffs accused the city of drawing voting districts which essentially violate the voting rights of Native Americans living in the city.

The case was ruled upon 2-1 by appeals judges Bye, Heaney, and Colloton in favor of the plaintiffs and it requires Judge Karen Schrier to hold additional hearings to see if city voting districts should be re-drawn.

Martin is divided into dual member wards and each has two aldermen who serve for two year staggered terms. According to the court document No. 05-1895 Lakota people make up 36 percent of the voting age population and represent 45 percent of the city population. An Indian-preferred candidate has only been elected twice since 1984 and when the ACLU sued the city last year, Schrier ruled that the plaintiffs in that case had not shown that white voters in Martin had voted in a

Grazing ordinance goes to districts in preparation for return to OST council floor

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "We are visiting each district with this proposed grazing ordinance," said Ruth Brown, chair of the tribe's land committee, "I'm doing my homework, I think there is change going on and I have had a chance to take it personally to Aberdeen for their review."

A year after it was originally scheduled to be approved, a proposed new grazing ordinance was presented to the tribal council at their regularly scheduled quarterly meeting at the Wounded Knee District School in Manderson in mid April. After some heated discussion, the new ordinance was tabled by a vote of 10-8.

"We are in a time of change, we have already seen a new $12 rate for each animal unit measure that was implemented by the Bureau on Nov. 1 for any new lessees and for all other on Nov. 1, 2006," said charter allocation committee member Melvin Cummings, a

Sadie In The Woods achieves academic excellence
Bound for Duke University on scholarships

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

KYLE - Each spring commencement in Lakota country brings with it almost "magical" stories of those young people who have achieved academic excellence and great athletic accomplishments. Sadie In The Woods is one who has achieved a perfect grade point average at Little Wound School and will be moving on to Duke University in the fall to study obstetrics. Her achievement as a Gates Millennium Scholar will help fund her studies for four years.

Her story after having lived a relatively young life is the stuff that headlines are made of.

In The Woods has enjoyed a stellar career on the basketball court and her accomplishments are too numerous to list, however, her presence has been immense at the annual Lakota Nation Invitational tournament for the last several years. Her honors range from KOTA News athlete of the week to LNI all-tourney to the MVP at the Dakota Oyate Challenge in Huron. She was a Junior National first team All American and South Dakota MVP.

In volleyball her honors have also ranged from LNI All-Tourney to West River All-Conference to Kadoka HS All-way to defeat candidates preferred by Lakota voters.

The appeals court judges wrote, "We disagree and remand the matter back to district court to complete the analysis required by the United States Supreme Court pursuant to section 2 of the Voting Rights Act as construed by Thornberg v. Gingles, 478 US 30, 49-50 (1986). If the district court then finds in favor of the plaintiffs, it shall develop a plan under which Native Americans will have a reasonable opportunity to elect an Indian-preferred candidate."

Section 2 says that a denial of right to vote occurs when, "It is shown that the political processes leading to nomination or selection in the State or political subdivision are not equally open to members of a class of citizens protected by subsection (a) of this section."

The appeals court judges agreed with the plaintiffs when they wrote, "In our view the district court erred in three respects when it determined the white majority usually did not defeat the minority-preferred candidate. First, it did not give sufficient weight to the exit polls of the 2003 elections. Second, it did not give any weight to the results of the 2002, 2003, and 2004 aldermanic elections.

Finally, the district court relied exclusively on county, state and national elections in determining that the evidence failed to prove that Indian-preferred usually lost elections."

Furthermore, the judges also wrote, "Because Native Americans and whites make up more than 99 percent of Martin's population, the only conclusion available is that white voters voted as a bloc to defeat the Indian-preferred candidates."

"This decision underscores the continuing problems faced by Native American voters as well as the need to extend the protections of the expiring provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act which are now being considered by Congress," said Bryan Sells, a staff attorney with the ACLU Voting Rights Project and lead counsel in this case. "I can tell you I think we have a very strong case."

"The Native American community in Martin, and especially the LaCreek District Civil Rights Committee, have worked so hard, for so long, to change their community into a good place to live and raise their children and grandchildren," said Jennifer Ring, Executive Director of the ACLU of the Dakotas.

"I am pleased that the Eighth Circuit recognized their right to finally have a say in how their town is run. Nothing beats an actual seat at the table," she said.

Earlier this year, the ACLU issued an 867 page report documenting 293 cases brought by the ACLU in 31 states to protect the right to vote and challenge discrimination in voting. The ACLU has urged Congress to renew the provisions of the Voting Rights Act that have been so effective in thwarting voting discrimination: These provisions are set to expire in 2007.

The ACLU has been involved in seven voting rights cases in South Dakota, winning all seven cases. The cases included were on the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock, Emery vs. Hunt; the second one was in Wagner vs. Community school district, third Bone Shirt vs. Nelson, which was voting irregularities in the state's District 27 around Pine Ridge and Rosebud, another was the Quiver vs. Nelson, which involved Shannon and Todd counties, Cottier vs. City of Martin, another case was in Buffalo County Kirkie vs. Buffalo County involved the county commission district in Buffalo County and Charles Mix County, Black Moon vs. Charles Mix County.

Pearl Cottier, is a long time resident of Bennett County and home owner in the city of Martin, and active in community and tribal organizations. She is currently center director of LaCreek College Center of Oglala Lakota College. She also is on the tribal gaming commission and the tribal personnel board.

Cottier was unavailable for comment. She was in a hit and run car accident April 26 on the Rosebud Reservation. She is currently at Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minn. Cottier suffered injuries from the accident.

Rebecca Three Stars, lives in Martin, and is a chemical dependency counselor with the Martin Addiction Recovery center. She refused to comment and referred comment to ACLU Attorney Bryan Sells.

The dissenting appeal judge Colloton wrote, "Because I do not believe the district court erred in its conclusion that plaintiffs failed to meet their burden, I would affirm the judgment of the district court."

livestock grower and landowner from Manderson, "how best can we balance the needs of the rancher with those of the landowner?"

Debate swirled on the floor that day in Manderson, a dialogue that looked at whether there should be a first and second preference included in the new ordinance as the old one had, if you require 100 per cent ownership of the cattle that are run on a unit does that hurt the small Indian operators, are there conflicts of interest built into the system with the BIA land operations office being involved in both the allocation committee and the appeals board, should they just open the bidding for the range units and is the tribe in a position as the largest landowner on the reservation to look at ways in which they may maximize the income they earn off of land leases?

The allocation committee has been in existence since 1970 when Johnson Holy Rock, Jake Little Thunder, Melvin Cummings and Charles Under Baggage first came together. Today's committee has a representative from each district with Cummings from Wounded Knee District, Donna Bull Bear Garnette/Medicine Root, Moon Weston/Porcupine, Chuck Olson/LaCreek, Gerald Bush/Eagle Nest, Dan Hudspeth/Oglala, Albert Curry Jr./Pass Creek, Faith Tobacco/Wakpamni and Fred Pond/Pine Ridge Village.

"We are taking this ordinance to Wakpamni today, to Pass Creek CAP in Allen next and we will be in Kyle on Friday, the 12," said Brown, "we took it to Aberdeen for the regional director, William Benjamin to review along with Alice Harwood, Jim Steele and their biologist."

Brown adds that on the recommendation of the Bureau, they will delete the portion about prairie dogs from the ordinance and the Bureau will not have anyone sit on the appeals board because of a conflict of interest.

"We want to set up a special council meeting for Wednesday, May 31 in LaCreek District for this ordinance," Brown said, "I'm geared up to get this passed, we need to move on."

In The Woods excells in academics

Tourney.

When asked about what kind of support she received from family and school she said, "My mom is a teacher and she pushes me academically. My dad has been my spiritual support. I come from a long line of midwives and I want to be the first certified obstetrician here to graduate from Duke." She said her grandma Wilma Whirlwind Horse, her mother, Sadie Zimiga, and grandmother, Elizabeth Witt, were traditional midwives who delivered many babies on the reservation. "I want to be the first certified obstetrician from my family."

Sadie's mother is Marla Herman, who is an English teacher at Little Wound High School and her father is Byron In The Woods, from Eagle Butte. Her siblings are Jemma and Trin In The Woods and a little brother Stormy Shot With Arrow. Jemma is a sophomore at United Sioux Tribes Technical College. Trin is a freshman at Little Wound High School.

Looking at a composite profile of Sadie reveals a young Lakota student who has been so very dedicated and consistent in her pursuit of her post-high school dreams. She visited the Duke campus in April and when she enrolls in the fall, she plans on trying out for the basketball team. She said, "I have been accepted into my dream school. I know that I will never be satisfied until I have at least tried and given it my all to make the team."

Academic excellence is equally as or more important than sports to In The Woods, as her goals include being a positive role model for children, being a medical doctor specializing in obstetrics/gynecology and opening a Ob/Gyn clinic on the Pine Ridge reservation.

Her 4.0 grade point average and 25 on the ACT test, combined with her number one ranking in a class of 50 seniors will serve her well as she moves on to the rigorous demands of a very elite eastern university.

Duke University was recently in the national spotlight with its Lacrosse team experiencing some legal problems; however, its reputation as an academic and athletic powerhouse on the east coast and the nation has not been diminished.

Sadie lives an alcohol and drug free lifestyle and that fact is noteworthy as Lakota youngsters who are following in her footsteps will want to know what it was that motivated her over the course of her education at Little Wound School. She said, "My teachers have been my number one support. They stayed and helped me and were very tough. We have the greatest teachers at Little Would School. I am very honored to be chosen as a guest speaker at the eighth grade graduation."

"Growing up, I had very few positive role models. I see the alcoholism, poverty and apathy here on the reservation and I want to become a role model for others like me."

She said she has role models now but when she was younger, she didn't have many role models.

In addition to the Gates Millennium Scholarship, Sadie also received the Mark K. Ulmer Memorial scholarship from the Native American Scholarship Foundation in the amount of $3,000. Duke University has given Sadie a nearly full ride scholarship. Duke is in Durham, N.C. Of the 19, 000 applicants who applied to Duke, only 1,665 were accepted and Sadie was one those accepted for the class of 2010.

She said, "I would like to thank the youth, community members, and staff at LWS and all those who believed in me and motivated me to do my best. I would like to acknowledge my grandpa Rex Herman who supported me in every way possible.

I would also like to thank my boyfriend, Chance Weston, and his wonderful parents for their support."

Sadie In The Woods has proven to be gifted academic scholar and her future just got brighter as the path to excellence is waiting to be paved. Singer Brian Littrel is credited with a quote that is appropriate to Sadie's academic journey.

He wrote, "Shoot for the moon, even if you miss, you'll land among the stars."

Groups plan demonstrations during Sturgis bike rally

STURGIS, S.D. (AP) - American Indian groups upset at commercial expansion toward Bear Butte during the Sturgis motorcycle rally say they will stage daily demonstrations during this year's rally.

Their commitment came Tuesday after the Meade County Commission approved a liquor license transfer for a new concert venue, Rock'n the Rally at Glencoe CampResort.

Last month, the commission approved a beer license for the Broken Spoke Saloon and Sturgis County Line campground.

Both enterprises would be about 3 miles from Bear Butte, which is a sacred site to a number of tribes.

Carter Camp of the Intertribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte and Jay Red Hawk of the Bear Butte International Alliance said the demonstrations during the Sturgis rally will be peaceful.

The groups also are organizing a large, summerlong gathering at Bear Butte that could draw as many as 10,000 people, Camp said.

Camp said the groups will ask bikers to voluntarily honor a buffer zone around Bear Butte, staying away from the rally campgrounds, saloons and concert venues east of Fort Meade Veteran's Affairs Hospital. He believes some bikers will side with the groups.

``We're not trying to shut down the rally," Camp said. ``We know the rally has an economic impact on the state; we just want a buffer around Bear Butte."

On Wednesday, the Meade County auditor said enough valid petitions had been submitted to refer the Broken Spoke beer license approval to a public vote.

The referral move hit a dead end Thursday when the county commission decided unanimously that its granting of the license is an administrative decision that cannot be referred to a public vote.

Tempers occasionally flared at the hearing. Commissioners imposed a 30-minute time limit for each side, but only a fraction of the opponents had spoken as the time limit expired.

At one point, Sheriff Ron Merwin stood between the commissioners and a number of angry people who were still waiting to testify when the time limit expired.

Nancy Hilding of Black Hawk said South Dakota law bars liquor sales on Sunday morning out of respect for Christians but that Indians are denied the same protection of their religion.

A gift of life and love

Kidney donation brings sisters and family together

BY NATASHA D. BORDEAUX
Rosebud Sioux Tribe Prevention Program Public Relations Specialist

ROSEBUD - After two decades of battling one illness after another, 58-year-old Tillie Black Bear was tired.

She had suffered through over a decade of battling the painful and debilitating disease called Lupus, (a chronic inflammatory disease where antibodies attack their own tissues and organs) followed by several years of dealing with type 2 diabetes and the resulting damage it caused.

Black Bear was diagnosed with Lupus in 1978. In 1988 the Lupus began attacking her liver. She was put on Prednisone (a steroid) to stabilize her liver. The Prednisone caused her to gain 66 pounds and consequently, in 1994, she was diagnosed with diabetes. Within a few years the diabetes began to take its toll on her body.

"By the summer of 2001 they told me my kidney function was below 15 percent and I needed to go on dialysis," Black Bear said.

Dialysis is an artificial process of removing waste from the blood stream, when the kidney can no longer do so.

"I hadn't given it much thought, at first," Black Bear said.

But her family was concerned and let her know.

"We had a cookout at Ghost Hawk Park. Afterwards, I went home and the whole family came. I was staying at my daughter Connie's at that time in Rosebud. All my nephews and nieces and grandkids came and talked to me about my dialysis, saying they wanted me to be here."

Black Bear said that meeting convinced her to go on dialysis.

"They talked to me and I listened to them. The decision was made by the young people (of my family). It was a really powerful meeting with those young people," Black Bear said.

Even with the support an encouragement of her family, Black Bear was still not prepared for the changes that dialysis would bring.

She would have to be on dialysis three times a week for three-hour-long periods.

"You are always drained on a dialysis run," she said. "I never could sleep (through the dialysis treatment)… I had difficulty just sitting still. It was hard just holding a book up."

Still she knew she could not live without the treatments and went obligingly to each one. But, after three and a half years on dialysis, she felt herself becoming depressed and questioned her reasons for hanging on.

"I think you just kind of exist on dialysis. You live day to day," Black Bear said.

"With people who are chronically ill, there are times when we get weak in our thought process. It gets frustrating because you can't do your own house cleaning, you can't cook for yourself, or do your own laundry, and you have to rely on the graciousness of others to do those things for you," Black Bear said.

> I think there must be a purpose that I was given another chance at life. Now I 'm looking for that purpose.
> -Tillie Black Bear

Violet Mousseaux and Tillie Black Bear.

"When you are not feeling well, you begin to think, 'Why am I still alive?'" she recalled.

Black Bear's family began to notice the change and became worried.

"We seen her turning toward the worst every time she went to dialysis," said Violet Mousseaux, Black Bear's younger sister.

"She was not getting better. To us, she was getting worse," Mousseaux said.

So the family called another meeting. And once again the youth of the family expressed how much they needed their auntie, their grandmother and mother with them. They encouraged her to look into a kidney transplant. Several family members stepped forward to volunteer to donate a kidney.

"But some had high blood pressure, or were diabetic, or had rheumatoid arthritis," Mousseaux said. But Mousseaux, at 53 years-of-age, had none of those ailments and was relatively healthy, despite a smoking habit. So she got tested.

"I was a match," Mousseaux said.

Through more prayers and discussion the two women decided they would go ahead with the surgery. Even so, they still kept their humor about them.

"When I would tell Tillie "I'm going to sweat to pray for you' she would say 'I don't want your prayers, I want your kidney," Mousseaux said.

But deciding to go through with it was only the beginning of a long and frustrating process. At first the family chose a hospital and surgeon in Colorado. But after driving back and forth for a few tests and meetings they decided that having the surgery in Sioux Falls, S.D., which was closer to home and family, was a better option.

But then there were more tests and hesitations and more tests. The doctors were very careful to make sure each of the women was cancer-free and other disease-free in order to assure the best outcome. There were mammograms, and blood tests and x-rays.

"It got to the point where I almost backed off. It seems like there was always something in the way," Mousseaux said. "I even got to the point where I told her to find someone else."

But despite those difficulties everything turned out for the best and the surgery was planned for January 6, 2005.

Both women were told that they had only a 50/50 chance of making it through the surgery.

"Even though they told me all that, I didn't have any fear, I was not scared or anything. I really put my heart into it.," Mousseaux said.

"Before the surgery we had four nights of ceremonies … It really helped," Black Bear said.

Mousseaux agreed that their faith helped them both focus on a good outcome. "We did a lot of praying before we went; we prayed that things would be ok," Mousseaux said.

"The day of the surgery the medicine person was there with us all day," Black Bear said.

Many of their family and extended family drove to Sioux Falls to offer prayers and support through the surgery. And it paid off!

Both women made it through the surgery without a hitch.

And while recovery has been difficult for both, they are doing well and enjoying their time together here on earth.

"Through love, prayers and family support we came through this," Mousseaux said.

Black Bear feels the same. "Now here I am, me, and my sister violet giving me a kidney. She wants me to be alive. Sometimes when it gets hard, like when I am still in pain and other people can't see it. It always helps to go to the sweat lodge to release some of that energy," Black Bear said.

Before and after the surgery both sisters have dealt with people's misconceptions about organ donations. Some have said it is against Lakota belief, or that a person will spend eternity looking for her kidney, or when you give away an organ you give away part of your spirit.

"I asked the priest about that. I am spiritually a real prayerful person," Mousseaux said. She said he was able to help her come to terms with these misconceptions through her faith in God, and her knowledge that she is doing something out of love.

Mousseaux said she was rather amused when "one person said you'll be looking for your kidney after you die. That didn't bother me because I know where it is."

Black Bear also takes the comments in stride. "Sometimes there is a misconception that it is against Lakota beliefs to give away your organs. But they are wrong," Black Bear said.

She said she feels honored to have a part of her sister with her. "When I die I will have all of my organs and part of my sister with me," Black Bear said.

Both Black Bear and Mousseaux have said how their grandkids have helped them get through the pain and disability after the surgery.

"There is still a lot of pain. It is hard just to endure the pain. Having the grandkids around really helps, seeing them everyday. They are very respectful. They help me walk by grabbing my arm. The young men, who wouldn't be caught anywhere with a purse, will carry their grandma's purse, for me," Black Bear said.

Mousseaux also found strength to heal from within her family. "It was my grandchildren and nephews and nieces that really occupied my time… they took the pain away from me by their presence, by being there and keeping me occupied."

Through it all, both women agree the surgery has brought them and their families closer together. It has increased their faith and has offered Black Bear a new lease on life.

Mousseaux says she encourages more Native people to embrace live organ donation as an option to improving the quality of life for their loved ones.

"I would say it is a very unique and priceless gift you can give to somebody. I would tell them, 'If you love that person, do it.' If they are scared, they can come to me and I can talk with them," Mousseaux said.

"It kind of made me feel good (to give a kidney) and made me feel special. To do something like that, especially for my sister, so she can live long and enjoy life with her grandkids and her family," Mousseaux said.

Black Bear can not be thankful enough for the gift her sister has given her.

"I very seldom get enlightening moments. But when my oldest grandson was graduating at St. Francis Indian School (last spring), I was thinking about when he was born …"

She said at that moment she recalled his life, and thought about the lives all her other grandchildren. She realized how fortunate she was to be sitting in her seat of honor at the graduation ceremony, watching her grandson at his proudest moment.

"I was really thankful for my sister Violet for giving me a kidney so I could see my grandson graduate. It was one of those profound moments," Black Bear said.

Now, Black Bear occupies her time with her work as Executive Director at the White Buffalo Calf Women's Shelter in Mission as well as with her many grandchildren, nephews and nieces and her own children.

Without the kidney transplant, Black Bear might still be alive today, but she would not have the energy and spirit she has come to value, since the operation.

"I think there must be a purpose that I was given another chance at life. Now I am looking for that purpose," Black Bear said.

Past Lakota Nation MVP's sign to play college ball next year

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

ABERDEEN/CHADRON - After a brilliant high school career at Todd County, Sunni Busch signed a letter of intent to play basketball at Chadron State College for the 2006/2007 school year.

"Sunni had the ability to dominate a game like no other player I've seen play," said Chuck Wilson, Todd County coach, "she was able to drive to the rim, pull up for a jumper, knock down a three and battle for rebounds as well as hit a teammate anywhere on the floor with a well timed pass."

Busch led the Lady Falcons to the 2005 State A tourney in Watertown where they finished sixth and helped this year's edition to an 18-5 record losing to Bennett County in the regional final. She led her team to back to back LNI championships in 2003 and 2004 earning the MVP awards each year. This year she was named to the first team all state for Class A in South Dakota.

Chadron plays in the tough Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference, a NCAA Division II conference and is looking to use Sunni and a number of other new recruits to rebound after several down years at the Nebraska panhandle school.

Lennea Mueller led her Custer Lady Wildcats to their first ever Lakota Nation title this past December, earning the MVP nod in the process. Mueller has signed with Northern State University in Aberdeen for the 2006/2007 school year.

Mueller was both the point guard and the top scorer for the Lady Wildcats earning all state honors this year and leading Custer to a fifth place finish in last years State A tourney in Watertown.

Lennea is one of nine recruits signed to play ball nest year for Northern, a program that finished this season with a 25-7 record losing in the semis of the North Central Regional tournament.

Tending to our own 'backyards'

The 2006 spring commencements are an exciting time in Lakota country as the culmination of a long and hard winter that saw Lakota people contending with the weather, rising propane prices, and the uncertainty of federal budget cuts that will surely impact the quality of education for our youngsters.

Last week, the Senate Appropriations Committee restored the planned cuts to the very important Johnson O'Malley program which aids many Lakota students in public schools.

It remains to be seen if they will restored permanently as part of the president's 2007 budget.

As families celebrate the achievements of their youngsters there are so many success stories amongst the people that it is difficult to single out any one individual.

We have to congratulate Sadie In The Woods of Little Wound School for leading the way in getting accepted to Duke University. She is also a Gates Millennium Scholar, along with Willow Wright and Kristin Herman of Todd County High School. We apologize for not publishing the entire first of such scholars in Lakota country as there are others.

Now that many of our Lakota youngsters will be moving on, it is a time of anticipation for those of us who expect great things from them. It is a time for action as Lakota country is in dire need of new leaders and achievers who will help us to adapt to the changing times and arrive at new and innovative ideas to eradicate some very old problems which continue to plague us.

Once again, good luck to all area Lakota students who will be matriculating from their respective schools and whether you are planning a career in the military, attending college, or going to work we are looking for you to make us proud.

On getting my fill Food for thought

BY NATASHA D. BORDEAUX

Rosebud Sioux Tribe

Diabetes Prevention Program

What I want to eat and what I should eat are two entirely different things.

For example, my favorite meal to cook and eat is beef stroganoff. I love the fluffy egg noodles, the texture of ground beef and the rich sour cream sauce with a tang of white wine, mushrooms and sweet onions.

Its indulgence at its most extreme -- and I can't get enough.

The dish is not hard to prepare and I can usually have it done in less than an hour. It's one of those meals I call a diet buster – high in carbs, high in fat, high in sodium and high in calories.

But have I mentioned how delicious it is?

On those glorious occasions when I prepare this meal my kids are ecstatic. Ok, maybe they're just excited. It's me who gets giddy with delight anticipating my upcoming gorge.

When the cooking and preparation are complete, I usually serve the kids all they think they can eat, and then… the rest of the pot is all mine!!

I almost inhale the first plate, spend a little more time chewing and tasting the second, and the third (sometimes fourth) I usually graze on and pick at until it disappears.

When I am finally finished I feel as though I am bursting at the seams. I waddle over to my easy chair and bask in my excess for as long as it takes for me to feel normal again.

I'm not sure how many calories I consume in an average stroganoff binge but I assume it's more than I can burn off in my daily exercise routine (in fact it probably will take two or three of my workouts to burn all that).

While my stroganoff incidents seem quite extreme, I have to admit that they are really not that far off from the way I normally eat.

I tend to eat until I am full. Even though I know that I have already eaten an acceptable portion size, I still need to feel "full." So I'll eat a little more, then pick at "just a bit more," and when I clean up the dishes I sneak in a little more of the kid's leftovers.

So as you can see, I spend a lot of time recuperating on my easy chair after I eat. I'm used to feeling like a stuffed hen after meals. And that's why, like many people, even when I'm preparing healthy food; I have a hard time reaching and maintaining my healthy goal weight.

I know maintaining that goal weight is the key to reducing my chances of developing diabetes, but immediate gratification often outweighs long-term health.

But I guess the first step to recovery is admitting there is a problem.

When I first made up my mind to "get healthy" I started with a little walking. After I lost a few pounds and felt stronger. I wanted to work on eating healthier. I learned about good foods, whole wheat versus processed white flour, lean meats, olive oil and the value of vegetables.

I revamped my kitchen cupboards and my refrigerator with mostly healthy foods. I revamped my recipes to include "healthy" options.

But what I should have done was revamp my way of thinking about foods.

Even healthy foods can be overdone. Six "healthy" chicken breast tacos in one sitting is not good for a person, no matter how healthy the ingredients.

I have come to the place in my journey toward health where I have to admit that portion size is just as important as exercise and eating healthy foods.

I have developed a few tricks to help me reduce the amount I eat. Since I seem to over-do it in the evenings I have found that relaxing with a cup of green tea after supper, exercising later in the evening, or just making time to relax and do something I enjoy each evening are some of the ways to quell my evening urge to eat.

I also take stock of just how much food I am actually eating. I visually "weigh" each portion and compare it to what a healthy portion looks like.

Monitoring portion sizes is a bit tricky, since the trend in our culture is bigger is better. But here are some cues:

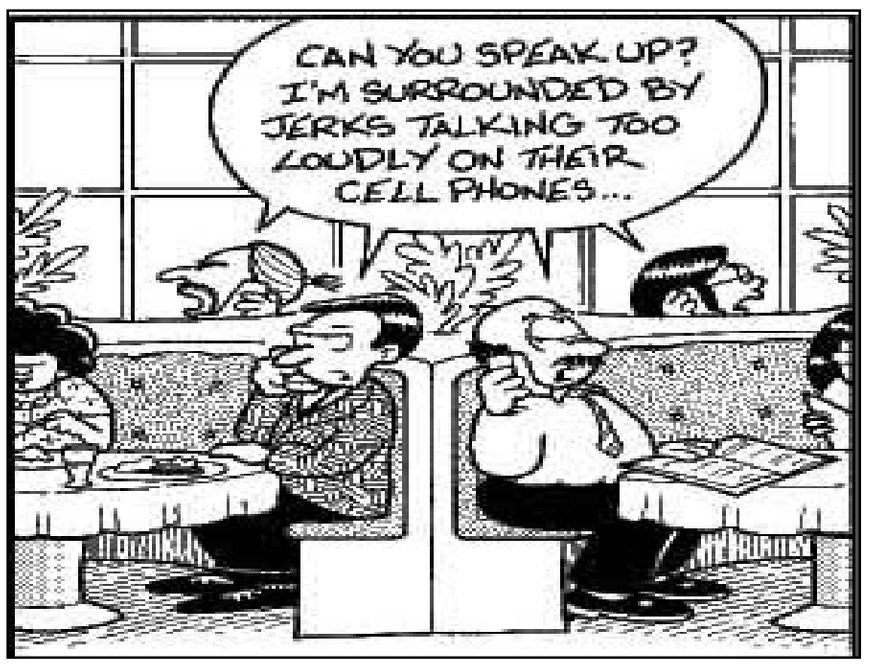
3 oz of meat is equal to one deck of cards.

A serving of pasta is ½ cup or the same size as a computer mouse

A baseball is equal to a portion of beans

A roll of film is equal to one serving of peanut butter

½ a cup of veggies is the same size as a computer mouse



2 9-volt batteries is the same as 1 ½ oz of cheese

10 French fries are size of a deck of cards.

The biggest obstacle to eating healthy is learning to eat for sustenance and not for pleasure. While I do not intend to give up my occasional stroganoff indulgences, I am pretty sure there will be some leftovers next time.

Eating right is a huge portion of maintaining a healthy weight. And maintaining a healthy weight is the key to keeping me and my family diabetes free. I know my view on food is one of the contributors to the unhealthy habits I have adopted over the years, and it is up to me to change that.

Changing my thinking about food just might be one of the toughest challenges I have undertaken. But if it means a healthier and happier life for me and my family then it just might be worth it.

Life begins at conception?

Dear Editor:

Life begins at conception? Is there proof of this? On the surface it seems easy to believe.

I can believe the physical body starts as an embryo and progresses into the fetus stage. But when does the consciousness, or soul, enter the body? So far, the beliefs about that indicate it enters at birth when the baby takes its first breath or through the soft spot, or during the eighth or ninth month of pregnancy.

The physical body and soul are separate. When a person dies, there are family members and friends who talk about speaking to the departed soul. Similarly, pregnant women often know that speaking to a waiting soul is not much different, and that includes speaking to the soul when it's not the right time or situation for adding a new life.

There's a difference betwen knowing and believing, and we need to kindly consider women's intelligence and beliefs when it comes to reproductive decisions. "The heart has its reasons which reason cannot know."

Much of life is cloudy, - a mystery. There are many assumptions and theories that cannot be proven. So much truth we don't know. One person's experience and/or belief cannot dictate everyone else's reality.

1. My grandpa tells of a true story
2. He and two of his friends went to visit relatives towards the cave and were on their way home to Platte River
3. It got dark on them on the Westside of the sacred Black Hills so they decided to bed down on a high ridge
4. My Grandpa got up early and went to find something to cook over the open fire and here he saw a streak of smoke arising from a ravine
5. He woke up his friends and told them, get up, we'll go and check where the smoke is coming from
6. Maybe whoever they are can share some food.
7. They came upon them preparing their breakfast
8. From a rise in the ground they could see what was going on. And here the smell of bacon over came them, so they started to walk toward them
9. The prospectors were frightened and then went for their guns, so they shot them down
10. They ate the bacon and sour dough in a hurry and caved the dirt bank over them
11. They checked the donkeys and tied to the packed saddles were some nice little pouches full of heavy rocks with a glistening affect.
12. They dumped the heavy ore and took the leather pouches, one of them said these will make good containers for our war paint.
13. My grandpa said, I will take one of these pouches full of rocks and also one of these rolls of paper money with a rubberband around it and show it to John Reshaw, he will know what it is.
14. John Reshaw saw what they brought for him to see, and was very glad.
15. He said I will keep these, tomorrow you came to my place, have a good meal and then pick out a horse of your choice from my herd.
16. You can also charge stuff from my store through the winter. (when a Lakota Ikazo they usually never pay up).
17. The next morning they went to Mr. Reshaws residence.
18. John Reshaw told them, well make preparation and in the spring we'll go look for the gold that you dumped.
19. In the spring when the snows melted and the grass turned green, they headed towards the Black Hills.
20. And here they couldn't find the place where they left the prospectors and their donkeys not even the dug out they lived in so they went back to Platte River empty.
21. Grandpa said maybe theres a reason for us not to find the gold.
22. Maybe this business man was going to take us again.
23. We used to tease our grandpa and say nowadays the white man developed a thing that you can find stuff like that lies buried in the ground.
24. Maybe we could rent of those counters and find that gold.
25. Grandpa would say maybe we weren't supposed to find that gold for a good reason.
26. Maybe we'll fight over it and kill each other.
27. The paper money that they let fly in the wind were brown, Grandpa later that these were 100 dollar bills and ----the rolls of money had rubber bands around them . They took the rubber bands and said these will make good hair ties.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Cell phone use and exercising respect

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Lately I have had discussions with several people on manners and etiquette and there was a great column in Rapid City Journal's Sunday edition by Lynn Taylor Rick on just that subject entitled 'Where have all our manners gone?'

She states a statistic by the Associate Press Poll, that nearly 70 percent of 1,011 adults polled believe that people are ruder today that they were 20 or 30 years ago.

She quotes Sandra Marker, a sociology professor at Black Hills State University in Spearfish as saying that we have become more of an individualist society. "I just think that's one of the reasons that there is so much more conflict in today's society. We've sort of gone away from manners," she said. "I think there's been a shift to the more self-centered." Taylor Rick said gone are days when people cringed at the thought of being scolded in public.

When I read that column I thought of Indian country and how life has become with cell phones use.

In the last five years, cell phones have become so much more popular and cell phone use has exploded on both the Pine Ridge and Rosebud reservation with the advent of the Life Line program which allows residents to become cell users at a low cost. That comes from a Federal Communication Commission's service program for low income consumers. It was a congressional mandate and is paid for by telecommunications carriers between states and international.

They have become known as 'commod phones.' There was another name that was floating about and people called them 'treaty phones' and that had a better ring to it. I think people called them that because they assumed it was one of our treaty rights but in reality it was because Cellular One, which is now Alltel Wireless, used the Life Line program to be able to offer cell phones to residents who were eligible because they had low income guidelines. Of course, there are limits to that, if one has a commod phone, it has restrictions that allows services only in a certain area.

Which means most of the service area is within the reservation boundaries prefixes, except for the Hills area.

Regardless, what it meant to reservation residents was a lot. It meant phone service for areas that don't have a regular telephone cable line to their homes. It meant being high in technology use to be able to have communication with family and others. It meant being able to have telephone service, which is considered a necessity for modern daily life.

And it was cool to see that type of service on the reservation, first Pine Ridge and then Rosebud and some where along the line the Navajo Nation will have the service. By now we all know what parts of the reservation offer the best cell signal or what areas have the lowest signal. We know when the signal ends and what areas we can make that last call on the way out of the reservation.

Along with that came 'mannerism' or respect. I have attended ceremonies and public events where it didn't bother people to keep their cell phone on and disrupt what was going on with their with phones ringing to the tunes of 'ring,,,ring' to O'Canada to the sound of popular songs. The phone would ring and the cell phone user would quickly take it out of their pocket or purse and of course check the caller ID to see who the caller was, then they would either silence it or answer it and whisper, "hello." While this was occurring, the people present would adjust their attention to what was going to the short act that just occurred with the cell user.

Several weeks ago, we attended a repatriation ceremony and I was surprised at the amount of people that used their cell phones during the ceremony. They either answered it right where they were sitting or they quickly exited the room while answering the phone. We left ours in the car. Because we knew we were going to participate in something that called for respect. If I am waiting for an important call and need to have my cell with me, then I put it on vibrate. Cell phones come with all kinds of little options, like vibrate or voice mail and things that are designed for respect. Voice mail is cool if the user really does return calls. Of course, I know a few people who have voice mails and hardly ever clean out their messages. When I tease them they should clean out their messages, they say 'oh yeah, that… well, I hate messing with that, takes too much time.' So don't know if that falls along the line of mannerism or just being lazy. The only thing it doesn't come with is a little manual that lets you know when to use it and when not to use in regards to respecting other people.

I have been in conversations where what was being said was important regardless if it was just family conservation or where business was being discussed.

Someone would be there with a cell phone and it would ring and they would answer it right there and carry on a conversation with the caller suddenly oblivious to those around them. And we would wait with patience until we could resume business.

As to why we lack respect in using cell phones is probably more along the lines of it being a new thing and it is so cool to be able to just own a cell phone and so of course we are going to use to the maximum possible.

Or maybe it is because that communication link is important to the user and the caller for what ever reason.

So should we really label that self centered as it is becoming more of a way of the future regarding manners and respect. We can whine and complain to no end but it is something that we aren't teaching in our t*iwahe* like we should or maybe it is because we don't teach for change in lifestyles like we should.

That could mean teaching our children how to live in a changing world and yet be able to retain our cultural values.

Notes From Indian Country

Is there a generic Indian word for greed?

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)
© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The jokesters call them "Katrina cottages" and there are 10,000 sitting empty in Hope, Arkansas. Ironically, these mobile homes now resting in the birthplace of former President Bill Clinton, were purchased by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (they bought 20,000 trailers for $440 million) to house the thousands of people left homeless by the Katrina Hurricane, but only half of them were ever utilized.

The trailer debacle was just another mistake in the long list of mistakes chalked up by FEMA after Katrina. It seems that FEMA has established rules that disallow manufactured homes from being set up in a flood plain, and since New Orleans is below sea level, it is considered by FEMA itself as a flood plain.

But all of that aside, what would be the most advantageous way to make good use of the stranded house trailers? Senator Tim Johnson (D-SD) has a great idea. Why not move them to where they are badly needed, say the Indian reservations? Many of the reservations in the west are housing poor. There are supposedly 90,000 families that are homeless or are living in substandard housing.

On reservations like the Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Crow Creek and Standing Rock, some homes hold as many as three families. People without a home see little hope for the future. Homelessness contributes greatly to the cycle of poverty so prevalent on Indian reservations in states like South Dakota.

The proposal by Senator Johnson has merit. He has taken the time to visit many Indian reservations in the west, particularly in his home state, and he has observed firsthand, the horrific living conditions of so many Indian families.

I recall visiting the office of Andrew Cuomo when he was the head of the Housing and Urban Development agency in Washington, DC and scratching my head in wonder as Cuomo took me through the halls of HUD showing me the enlarged photos of the interiors and exteriors of the terrible housing problems on South Dakota's Indian reservations

Some of the photos showed the poverty stricken families sitting on makeshift beds that doubled as couches surrounded by all of the accoutrements of the very poor. All of the evidence of the harsh conditions existing on these reservations was there decorating the halls of HUD like so many trophies. Why even post these terrible photos? What purpose did they serve if nothing was being done to change the images?

The living conditions of the very poor Indians in states like South Dakota, compared to those very rich casino Indians, is analogous to people living in the poorest Third World country to those living in Beverly Hills, California. In fact, there is no comparison. Some Indian tribes are making so much money from their casinos that their members live in 4,000 square foot mansions while in South Dakota many tribal members live in the worst squalor.

The very rich gaming tribes are not obligated to help their brothers and sisters on the poor reservations and in most cases, they don't. It bothers some of us greatly when we observe these rich tribes spending millions promoting boxing matches or buying professional women's basketball teams, or just squandering their money on golf courses and elaborate resorts.

And even when these rich tribes try to help, it sometimes causes more problems than even they anticipated. Case in point, the Shakopee Nation in Minnesota made a loan of $38 million to the Oglala Sioux Tribe of the Pine Ridge Reservation recently. Perhaps the loan should have come to the tribe in the form of a grant because the entire financial obligations of the tribe to repay the loan was not explained thoroughly to the general population and once the rumor mills started chaos set in.

Tribal President Cecelia Fire Thunder requested the loan for all of the obvious reasons. The tribe was heavily in debt and sinking deeper every day. The loan would not only help the tribe lift itself up from the depths, but it would help them build an addition to their casino and, hopefully, provide more income and jobs. As I said, these good intentions were not explained very well reservation-wide and soon rumors began to circulate that the tribal council and its president had put up the very land the tribe walked upon as collateral for the loan. Impeachment proceedings were started and Fire Thunder was suspended from office for 66 days.

Fire Thunder eventually set the record straight and her suspension was lifted, but all of this turmoil and loss of valuable time could have been prevented if the communications between the tribal government, the Shakopee and the people had been more specific. Although Shakopee's intent was good, the aftermath was not.

With all of their millions Shakopee should have sent a delegation of public relations people to Pine Ridge to explain all of the intricacies of the loan, and when things turned so bad that Fire Thunder was nearly impeached, Shakopee should have intervened by removing the 6 percent interest rate it was charging the tribe for the loan, or by making the loan an outright grant.

All that aside, I commend Sen. Tim Johnson for taking the initiative to find adequate housing for some of the poorest tribes in America and as I have written in the past, Tim Johnson is one of the very best friends the Indian people have in the U. S. Senate. Representative Stephanie Herseth (D-SD) is the very best friend Indians have in the House of Representatives.

I also say shame on you to those rich tribes that squander billions on frivolity while their brothers and sisters live in extreme poverty. Is there a generic Indian word for greed?

Thoughts of the Sturgis Rally and its impact on our family

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I wrote a feature story about Alice Four Horns of St. Francis for our issue number 25 and I thought it turned out pretty doggone good. Unci Alice even said it did. I actually kept some extra copies of the story that I need to give to her. Alice is my niece, Mara's close relative through her paternal side. Mara's father is a former brother in law and he and Alice share the same last name. Anyway, I was close to Mara as I lived with her family for the last couple of years of her high school days.

Alice was at Mara's funeral and spoke in Lakota about the fragile nature of our lives, especially when it involves the death of our young Lakota.

Mara was tragically killed by a motorcycle at the Piedmont exit during the Sturgis rally a couple of years ago and it was difficult to accept her death as our family cherished her greatly. She had a wonderful personality and she never failed to razz you if it looked like you were ignoring her. I still feel sadness when I hear her favorite song, "Bittersweet" by Big Head Todd and the Monsters.

As the Sturgis rally approaches each summer we begin to re-visit the loss of Mara. When I think about the accident I try to imagine all of the events that had to fall into place that night so that they would all converge and Mara would be in the wrong place. That's about the only way to explain away someone's senseless passing. In Mara's case she left four beautiful children to mourn.

As I have noted in many of my writings, I am functionally fluent in Lakota and am not a white man as one writer accused me of being recently, eyas tiwahe mitawa ki hanke un wasicu. Our extended family like many Lakota on the northern plains carries a beautiful French name. I think it may translate to 'beautiful journey' and it aptly describes my personal journey at times.

The Lakota people follow an oral tradition and many kolas of mine will admit that they do not write out Lakota, but are very good speakers of the language. Friends of mine like Sylvan White Hat, Pat and Howard Bad Hand, and cousin Ned Metcalf have taught me valuable lessons about speaking Lakota and not necessarily about the written form as Lakota people didn't have books thousands of years ago. As I do my translations I use Fr. Buechel and Fr. Karol's dictionaries occasionally, even though they are the white guys.

I simply plod along and see if I can write what I hear phonetically, after all as one gets older you don't quite hear the same as when you are young. I am proud of my burgeoning ability to know the language of my ancestors on my Iron Shooter side and am doing quite well.

Keep up the good work guys as the language as very much alive and we have many great teachers whom I have learned so much from. We are going to publish an interview that I did with Johnson Holy Rock soon and do it as a 'contest' where students will be asked to translate the interview from Lakota to English for a prize.

Just carrying out the district's orders

Dear Editor:

I attended a council meeting on April 11 at Manderson because the Medicine Root District had some complaints and charges against our councilwoman so I was asked by the members to attend the council meeting. I listened to the council all morning talking about complaints, then they broke for dinner.

After dinner I was in the school office making some copies for the tribal treasurer when a police officer came up to me and said he wanted to talk to me outside, so I asked him if I could give the papers to the treasurer first. Then I went with the officer outside and asked him what was wrong and he said his police car was over there, so I went to the car and got in and still didn't know why.

While this was going on, children were getting out of school and getting on the bus. I thought to myself what were the children thinking when they have seen one of their grandma's get in a police car.

I had no idea what was going on until I got to Pine Ridge and was taken to jail. There I was booked for disorderly conduct and harassment. The statement was by the Wounded Knee councilman and happened more than a month ago. Back in March I spoke to him outside of the Red Cloud building, I asked him some questions that he couldn't answer so he filed charges against me. When a councilman takes an oath of office, he is sworn to promote and protect the Oglala Sioux Tribe, I am one of the tribal members and it didn't look like he was protecting me, instead he had me thrown in jail for speaking out to him about his duties as a councilman.

This isn't the end of it, two days later on April 13, I was served with a restraining order by the Medicine Root District councilwoman. All I was doing was carrying out the orders of the Medicine Root District members, as I am chairperson of the district.

I brought charges against the Wounded Knee councilman on April 13 for elderly abuse, harrassment, and false accusations. He wasn't arrested, is it because he is a councilman and I am just an elderly member?

What is this world coming to if you can't talk to a councilman and questions his actions? It seems like the council is dictating to us members instead of listening to us.

Maybe we need to take a good look at the up coming election.

Local youth experience cultural ride at creation story performance

BY NATASHA D. BORDEAUX
Special to the Times

ANTELOPE - The deep, constant drone of the drum intermingled with the clear and true voices of the hoka (singers) set the stage for a heart-felt journey.

The journey was a modern cultural performance of the Creation Story which is a combination of the oral storytelling tradition combined with traditional song and dance in a modern, stage-like setting.

The April 27 performance brought the audience of an estimated 700 youth and community members at the SGU Multipurpose gymnasium to complete silence then rallied them to shouts of joy and excitement.

The smell of burning sage and the special-effects of rising smoke amongst the dancers struck an emotional chord with the audience. The traditional storytelling style of Albert White Hat was interlaced with the graceful movements of dancers in full traditional regalia. White Hat related the traditional Lakota creation stories in several segments to the audience.

The performance required the expertise of 20 local dancers, nine of them youth.

Ihaaaaani ... (In the beginning...)

Albert White Hat narrated the Lakota cultural performance of "Creation Story" on Thursday, April 27 at the Sinte Gleska University Multipurpose Gymnasium in Antelope. The modern stage performance incorporated Lakota storytelling with many traditional Lakota dances and music. Twenty dancers and the Kiyukanpi drum group lead the audience of over 700 youth and community members through the gamut of pride, joy, elation and sorrow with their heart-felt performances.

The show was much more than simply beautiful, it was moving. It allowed the audience to collectively enjoy a sense of pride and self importance that only comes from a compassionate performance with heart-felt performers.

The audience was at once in awe and filled with joy. Adrian Yellow Kidney, a student at family life center, summed up his emotions stating, "It made me want to sing!"

Another student, Tomas Martinez of Mrs. Bartlett's 4th and 5th grade classroom at Rosebud Elementary, was also deeply moved.

"The play changed my life. By seeing them dance, I was sad when (Albert White Hat) said we were the last of our people. When they beat the drum it makes me want to dance," he said.

The emotion and pride felt by the audience was quite clear despite the intense darkness in the venue. The only lighting was the stage lighting on the players, provided by Jim Bordeaux, which added intensity and continuity to the overall performance.

Denise One Star, TCSD Indian Studies Coordinator and performer said the performance was about offering culturally appropriate role models to the youth. "There are so many outside influences on our youth. This is something that is theirs. Something they can feel proud of," said One Star.

She said she was happy with the response the audience gave to the performance.

Some students left with more knowledge of their own culture, like Tab Stoneman of the Family Life Center. "It talked about our culture and how we were a long time ago … the way they put that play - it was cool. I like my culture."

Randi Running of Mrs. Bartlett's class at Rosebud Elementary left with a greater sense of pride in her culture. "It made me proud and happy just to see our people sing and dance."

The show was sponsored by the Todd County School District, Sinte Gleska University and Tribal Education.

The first four lines of the poem read "What is love? What is Marriage? You'll find the answer In a baby carriage."

In March, Trevor was nominated as a "2006 Poetry Ambassador" by the International Library of Poetry and received a certificate.

Iron Cloud was also nominated by the International Society of Poets as the "Poet of the Year" for 2006.

Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce elects new officers

KYLE - The Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce membership has selected a new board of directors at their April 19 meeting.

The Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce's office in located at the Lakota Fund building in Kyle and has a membership of 118 businesses and 70 percent are in the Pine Ridge area.

Those elected to the board are:

Harvey White Woman, Lakota Fund/WBI for a two year term as president.

Sam O'Rourke, Badlands Septic Pumper, for a three year term as vice president.

Anne Hunter, Lakota Express/Lakota Mall for a two year term as secretary.

Daphne Richards-Cook, Alliance of Tribal Tourism Advocates for a one term as treasurer.

Llody Patton for a one year term as fifth member. Other board members include Howard Olson of Singing Horse; Larry Pourier for Native American Natrail Foods; Daycia Cummings of Red D Cash/Ibank; Kimberly Tilsen-Brave Heart of Rural Community Innovations.

White Woman said one of the focuses of the newly elected board is to refocus on the overall intent of the chamber and continue to work on building a better business environment for businesses and also to provide more services for the fees the chamber members pay.

He said they will continue to advocate for the current businesses and potential business in regards to policy and laws that govern how a business can operate on the reservation. Part of that is educating the community and tribal leadership and other governments what a business owner has to go through with their unique challenges in being successful in this area.

When you see a lot of people are first generation entrepreneurs and every successful business that is created is a role model for up and coming entrepreneurs, he said.

OLL students complete DARE program

PORCUPINE - On April 20, 61 students graduated from the Our Lady Of Lourdes School drug resistance program.

Molanna Clifford, the school resource officer, said the Drug Abuse Resistance Education was a pioneer prevention effort founded in Los Angeles in 1983, and teaches kids how to recognize and resist the direct and subtle pressures that influence them to experiment with alcohol, tobacco, marijuana, and other drugs.

Between 70 percent and 90 percent of all crime is drug related. The DARE program is a part of the Our Lady of Lourdes Elementary School students' educational experience.

The program started Feb. 9 and ended March 20.

A specially trained officer enters the classroom as a "coach" to support kids who are using research-based refusal strategies in high-stakes peer-pressure environments.

Officer Clifford (Alumnus Our Lady of Lourdes Elementary) is an excellent role model and educator throughout the eight week program, and the students highly respect and admire her, said Erin Hoover, guidance counselor. One of the final DARE projects for each student was to write an essay of the skills they learned through the program.

Each essay written showed evidence that the students had been very attentive.

It is our hope that through programs like this our youth will develop additional skills to become and remain healthy and successful as individuals, and as members of our communities, said Hoover.

All 61 OLL students successfully completed the curriculum, and a graduation ceremony was held in the OLL gym on April 20.

Captain Pat Mills (Alumnus Red Cloud Indian School) was the graduation speaker. Our Lady of Lourdes Elementary is part of the Red Cloud Indian School System. This is just another example of our graduates giving back to the community and to the students, said Hoover.

Open forum/summit meeting on treaty issues held

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - The Sicangu oyate hosted an open forum and summit at the Lakota veterans gym on Saturday, April 29, according to former RST council representative Darrell Marcus who coordinated the summit. The Lakota language was utilized, while many reverted to English for non-Lakota speakers.

A host of speakers were invited to discuss the treaties, the I.R.A. government, pending resolutions, a plan for future meetings and an update on Bear Butte. Marcus and eight other tribal members and also the R.S.T. Treaty office had attended a meeting of the Meade County commissioners in Sturgis earlier on the application for a liquor license by Jay Allen and was able to give an account of an encounter that was tension filled as sheriff's deputies with pistols filed into the courtroom.

The Bear Butte International Alliance based in Sturgis has been on the forefront along with other grass roots people to oppose the construction of a couple of 'biker bars' being built so close in proximity to the sacred Mato Paha.

Marcus reported that he had been appointed to the Black Hills treaty council representing the Sicangu along with Stanley Red Bird, Jr., Leland Little Dog and Delmar Iron. There was no quorum present for a meeting of the Black Hills treaty council.

Representatives of the Oglala Lakota, Sicangu Lakota, Kule Wicasa, Cheyenne River Lakota, the Ihanktonwan, and the Ft. Peck reservation in Montana were at the meeting. Three such meetings will be held in the future at the veterans gym.

Marcus served as the emcee for the open forum and summit on treaties. Harold Salway gave an opening prayer and sang an 1868 treaty song. Speakers included Floyd Hand, Duane Good Face, Homer Whirlwind Soldier and others after introductions were made of all present.

Ione Quigley and Victor Douville of the SGU Lakota Studies department apparently gave an excellent PowerPoint presentation on the historical Sicangu leadership which focused on a traditional form of government. Douville is a noted Sicangu Lakota historian and has been teaching at SGU since the university opened its doors in 1971. He has been researching and writing on the topic of a traditional form of Lakota government that is community based and will likely have some of his work published soon.

The Oceti Sakowin group from Standing Rock reservation and Cheyenne River reservation also were present and were in support of a blood quantum initiative which was not acted upon as there was no quorum as noted.

Marcus served on the RST tribal council for three consecutive terms representing Soldier Creek and Ring Thunder district and reported that he did a lot of research and study on the topic of diplomacy, democracy and tribal government during first part of his tenure as council representative.

He served in the U.S. Marine for four years and attended Arizona State University in Tempe, AZ. His wife, Donna, is employed in the administration department at the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital. He says that he has been asked on several occasions to put into action the idea of a return to a traditional form of government that would exist side by side with the present IRA government. He said, "I would go into each community and ask them about a different form of government to work with the IRA. There would be memorandum of agreement that we would get special funding also for our needs."

A follow-up summit of treaty issues will be held on June 26 to coincide with Indian Day and the state's congressional delegation, the BIA, and the I.H.S. will be invited to speak about the history of tribal government from 1934 forward.

There will be a Treaty & Open Forum meeting at the St. Francis Veteran's Gym starting at 10 a.m to 6 p.m. on June 3.

SBA Loan Express Tour held for entrepreneurs

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - The long hours and commitment that goes into owning a small business can be rather intimidating, especially when one has to contend with regulations, a business plan, employee supervision, and the rest of the demands of owning or starting up a small business. The Small Business Administration (SBA) was on a six location "Loan Express Tour" in five stops in South Dakota last week and it held a kind of "personal income empowerment" day at the SuAnn Big Crow Boys and Girls Club on Thursday, April 4.

The program which began at 12:00 pm to 4:00 p.m. saw some 32 participants who signed in at the door and were given registration materials.

A guide for small businesses was given out entitled "Business Resource, For Starting and Expanding Entrepreneurs" and it provides information from 'getting started' in small business to listing many internet and print resources that are available to small business.

The SBA has a 52 year history in which it has added to its financial assistance function by offering publications which help small business owners to gain skills to start, manage and a grow a small business. Its Resource Directory contains 60 publications on financial management, marketing, emerging businesses, etc. The publications are available from the SBA website at www.sba.gov/library/pubs.html.

Pat Ross of the OST credit board and TERO director kicked off the day's program and a catered meal was served with a Lakota prayer offered by Dr. Archie Beauvais. John Brown II, the District Director of the SBA's South Dakota District Office was the lead presenter as he spoke of the 'Express Tour' and its objective to bring services to the people, rather than the reverse. He said, "We needed to do the tour. It is an opportunity for the programs, services of SBA and its partners to bring services to the people, instead of them coming to us. It can take months to get those services."

Brown introduced the four financial lending partners that were along on the tour. They included Clay Colombe of Wells Fargo Bank of Mission, Dona Leavens of the Small Business Development Center in Rapid City, the Community Express Loan Program of California and the First National Bank of Gordon.

Wendy Apple of the Lakota Fund in Kyle spoke of her role as a business success coach for Wawokiye in setting up a program called "People of the Arts" which is a directory of Oglala Sioux tribal members who create beadwork, quilts and clothing. The directory will be available in all visitors' centers.

Patricia Catches, an Oglala elder, arrived after the meal and after participants had dispersed to consult with the lenders at their respective tables. She said, "I just want some information. I am scared of a loan because of the unpredictability of the economy. The type of business I am interested in goes in phases. I don't know if they can help me. It would be better if I did a feasibility study, but I have not." Patricia alternated between English and Lakota and explained that she does some of her work at home as she is interested in a small employment agency for those over 55 years of age.

Courtney Two Lance of OST took care of registration and was instrumental in setting up the program. She said, "I recommended eight clients for this and they are all here. We need to try and contract with the SBA for a small business development center. As the cuts become more apparent we need to do more. We need more lenders to come here. This is the place to invest."

Two Lance was excited by the fact that her office had secured a $30 thousand grant to set up a secured transaction code under the tribal Uniform Commercial Code.

She had recently returned from a training session where that topic had been discussed and she noted that the funding will help to provide for training for the courts. Her hope was that this kind of work could be its own tribally chartered entity whose focus would be zoning and consumer protection.

Cougar killed at Mission

MISSION, S.D. (AP) - A mountain lion that was chased up a tree by dogs was shot and killed by tribal wildlife officials in the Mission city limits Saturday morning.

Mission is on the Rosebud Indian Reservation.

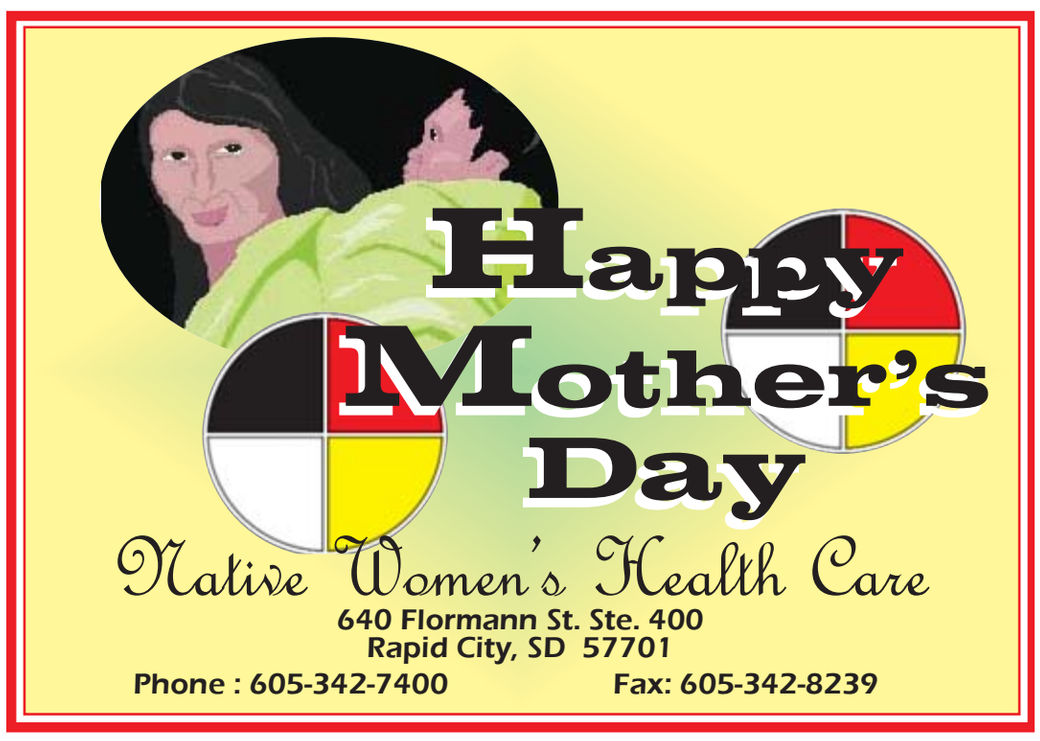
``We had the option of tranquilizing it, but we couldn't get a person with the credentials to do it. So we opted to harvest it because it was in a residential area,'' said Chance Wooden Knife, the director of the tribe's Department of Game, Fish and Parks.

He said it was a young male.

Officials with the South Dakota Department of Game, Fish and Parks say mountain lions that are showing up outside the Black Hills usually are young ones that are forced out of the hills by older cats to protect their territory.

Wooden Knife said there are occasional reports of mountain lion sightings in the area, but none has been confirmed before this.

``Our department doesn't have a mountain lion policy. After this I guess we'll have to reorganize and get one,'' he said.



Lakota Funds to offer small business course

KYLE - Beginning Wednesday, May 17, there will be a community entrepreneur class at the Pejuta Haka College Center in Kyle from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m.

The class is sponsored by Oglala Lakota College, Lakota Funds and Wawokiye Business Institute.

People who are interested in starting their own small business should attend the 12 week course. CEUs will be awarded and attendees who successfully complete the course work will receive a certificate. Contact Wendy Apple at Lakota Funds at 455-2500 or Doug Noyes @ dnoyes@olc.edu.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I worry about my son all the time. He has a problem with alcohol and drugs.

I pray for him all the time, but he seems to do good for just a little while, and he's back to the stuff again. He does have friends, but he chooses to communicate with his user friends more than the normal friends.

He has a child, but it seems that he has no responsibility. He can't hold ajob, he can't hold a relationship, so what else is new. Sometimes I get so frustrated, and I don't want to help him anymore, but I love him.

I keep harping on him to get into treatment, but he doesn't answer me. Does he hear me when I talk to him, or does he tune me out? What do you see for my son? I only want to hear the good, not the bad.

Thank You, Worried

Dear Worried:

You are not alone. There are hundreds of parents on and off the reservation fighting this same battle. What I see for your son in a continued hard time - until he has such a hard time that he finds sobriety.

This sobriety will enhance his self-esteem, allow him to return to school and reestablish his life in a much better way. When? You want to know when? Give or take a little in time, based on his own personal rhythm, it feels to be about almost a couple of years from now. He is very likely to spend some time in jail.

I have been in your shoes, and there is no easy answer for how to deal with this. My final solution was to totally abandon my son, his friends, his responsibilities and to outlaw him from my home until he could find sobriety. You owe it to yourself, and to your son, because anything you do to "enable" him makes it easier to keep using.

Your son's patterns of behavior are symptomatic of a "addict" and his buddies. They begin to set themselves aside from all of their regular friends because of the fear of disapproval. They create "special bros" that share their secret and live the same lifestyle. That is why a person that goes through treatment has to change friends in order to stay sober.

You will make it mom. He will survive. There are programs to help both you and him. Contact Anpetu Lute Otipi (for example) or find resources in your area to help you. An intervention may work, but it is risky because it comes from the "outside" not the inside of the addicted family member.

He will try from time to time to stay clean...but until he really sees sober as an advantage in his personal experience, he won't stay sober.

Again, get into tough love, and maybe that will help make his life experience so tough a little bit sooner so that he changes his direction just a little sooner. Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

I have been think about having another child but I am unsure if I should or not. I have been thinking about it alot and I was just wondering if you could help me with my choice or give me a little direction.

I have a child that is older and my boyfriend of almost three years wants me to have his baby. We are both older and we live together but I guess I am really scared to have a child with him, I don't want to have to raise the child on my own like I did with my first. I know that I would have the help of my mom and sisters but that isn't their job. What I really want to know is should I have a baby with him or not? Are things going to change with him and I any time soon? And if they are going to change is it going to be for the better?

Thank you Anna for your time.

Dear Your welcome for my time:

Nope. I see you deciding that the odds are pretty good that if you did have this child you would be raising it alone - eventually anyway. Good decision. I know you care for your boyfriend, but he has some pretty severe control issues and you seem to have jealousy issues ...and no matter what that equals a rough road. I personally would not make a decision to hold on to somebody that I really don't see myself with in the long term.

You want to know if having a baby will change him? Well yeah, it will make him more unavailable - and more fiscally in debt. He can't change without finding something within himself - a relationship with the Creator, a belief in himself, release of anger....therapy....something has got to trigger within himself a desire to change and live in harmony and peace. You are not the person to do that, if you were....it would be done.

Dear Anna,

School is almost over. I really like school and I worry about being home all summer with my crazy family.

They fight and drink and act crazy and hit each other and scream. I want to get a job but I don't have any way to get to work. What do you see?

Wants to Run for the summer

Dear Wants to Run:

I guess this says a lot about the void created by YO closing its doors. I understand that there is a new program being formed so keep up with the news on that one, and meanwhile contact the Boys Club in Pine Ridge and ask for some help. For next year contact the National Parks Administration and ask about applying for a position within our National Parks that includes room and board for the summer season. It is a great opportunity and I see you working at Glacier National Park next year. I see you working as a waiter and cleaning rooms - and working in a kitchen area.

Good luck with your family. I am glad that you recognize that their nutsiness is not related to you, and that you still love them and have compassion for them. You are a good strong young man. I see that you go to sweat sometimes, so please remember to pray for a better life for yourself and others. You will go away to school - someplace in Colorado, and I do see that you are very good with cars and motors.

You will be able to teach car mechanics someday - maybe on the reservation and help other youths get away from home for the summer. Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

How old do I have to be before I have sex?

Just wondering

Dear Just wondering:

Old enough not to have to ask. I'd say somewhere around 40 - the age when most men finally understand what it is all about - and are finally mature enough not to have to prove it (zssst - burn).

Happy Mother's Day

My Beautiful, Beloved Sister

I think of you everyday and as this

Mother's Day nears, I'm reminded of how fun & loving you were.

I miss you dearly and if I can Turn back time, I'd change everything

On that dreadful night when you left and never returned.

We all miss you, especially your babies.

We know you are always near, but sometimes that is enough.

Life is a mystery and life is beautiful, we wish you were here to enjoy it with us. Letting go is the hardest thing we have to do; why did you have to leave so soon?

Words can't express the love and Admiration that I have for you.

You were strong, beautiful, funny, caring

And always knew what to say to brighten one's day. Right now,

I wish you were here to help ease the pain of your absence.

I love you but I know you knew that.

May you rest in peace.

MUMPS

As of April 17, 2006 Nebraska, 92 confirmed and probable cases have been reported to the Nebraska Department of Health (DOH). As of April 29, 2006 IOWA, 975 confirmed, probable, and suspected cases of mumps have been reported to the Iowa Department of Health.

The majority of cases are occurring among persons 18-25 years of age, Many of whom are vaccinated. Additional cases of mumps, possible linked to the Iowa outbreak, are also under investigation in seven neighboring states, including Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, and Wisconsin.

The Iowa Department of Health has identified two (2) persons diagnosed with mumps who were potentially infectious during travel on nine different commercial flights involving two airlines between the timeframe of March 26, 2006 - April 2, 2006. The origin and arrival cities for these flights included Cedar Rapid/ Waterloo, IA; Dallas, TX; Detroit, MI; Bentonville, AR; Minneapolis, MN; St. Louis, MO; Tucson, AZ; and Washington, DC.

Symptoms & Signs

After a 14 to 24 day incubation period, the onset of mumps occurs with chills, headache, anorexia, malaise and a low to moderate grade fever that may last 14 to 24 hours before salivary gland involvement is noted.These symptoms may be absent in mild cases.

Diagnosis

Diagnosis of typical cases during an epidemic is easy; diagnosis of sporadic cases is not.

Prognosis and Prophylaxis

Prognosis is excellent in uncomplicated mumps. Although rarely, a relapse occurs after about 2 weeks, particularly in postpubertal patients; mumps may involve organs other than the salivary glands. Symptoms may precede, accompany, follow, or occur without salivary gland involvement.

Live mumps virus vaccine is the agent of choice for active immunization. This vaccine produces no significant local or systemic reaction and requires only one injection. The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends vaccination (with measles-mumps, rubella) at 12 to 15 months of age and again at entry into grade school or junior high school. Post exposure vaccination does not protect against mumps from that exposure.

Treatment

Treatment is symptomatic. A soft diet reduces pain caused by chewing. Acidic substances (e.g. citrus fruit juices) may also cause discomfort and should be avoided. Analgesics may be used for headache and general malaise.

Vaccination

The current recommendation is that a first dose of MMR be administered at age 12 to 15 months, with a second dose at four to six years. If the second dose is missed it can also be administered during adolescence.

KILI Radio needs $201,000 for antenna

Replacement package requires 25 percent match

PORCUPINE - "Up until now it has been fairly fluid on what we needed and what we were going after," said Melanie Janis, KILI station manger, "after working with our engineer and a national consultant, we are now requesting enough money to replace our antenna, the transmission line, our transmitter and put in a new grounding system."

KILI Radio was hit by lightening on April 15 and went off the air due to damage to the equipment on April 23. First estimate to replace the antenna and line was $50,000, then a real estimate based on bids from vendors was $76,000 and after further evaluation it was found necessary to replace the entire transmission package at $201,000.

Public Telecommunications Facilities Program out of the Department of Commerce has a regular funding cycle for equipment for public television and radio stations around the country, they also have emergency funds according to Janis. If PTFP funds the project, they require a 25 per cent match which in KILI's case would be somewhere between $40,000 and $50,000.

"We have held a series of fundraisers in the community, in Kyle, Manderson and Porcupine," said Janis, "and on Saturday in Rapid City, the Oglala Nation Education Coalition decided to take $18,000 awarded to ONEC from the Empowerment Zone for an educational project and pass it on to KILI to help the station reach their required matching monies."

Expressing concern about the need to get the station back on the air as soon as possible, the ONEC

Man convicted of selling meth on Wind River, Rosebud and Oglala appeals his life sentence

DENVER (AP) - An attorney for a man serving life in prison for selling nearly 100 pounds of methamphetamine on a Wyoming Indian reservation told a federal appeals court last Thursday the sentence was unreasonable and should be recalculated.

Jesus Martin Sagaste-Cruz likely would have been sentenced to about 20 years if he had not been punished further because another man carried a gun during drug transactions, said his attorney, Randall Gaither. Prosecutors said the second man was directed by Sagaste-Cruz.

Gaither told a three-judge panel of the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that Sagaste-Cruz's sentence was lengthened because of his business relationship to Vance Gilliam, who also was convicted in a drug ring that authorities said was headed by Sagaste-Cruz and his brother, Julio Cesar Sagaste-Cruz, who is still wanted for his role. Both are Mexican citizens.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Murray told the panel that even if the trial judge had not punished Sagaste-Cruz for someone else's firearm, he still could have been sentenced to life because he had organized and directed the drug ring.

``I believe the trial court said something to the effect that because the quantities were so great, that enhancement (of the sentence because of the gun) wasn't really important,'' Murray said.

The prosecutor said Gilliam and at least five others were under Sagaste-Cruz's direction in a drug operation that stretched from Mexico to the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota.

Authorities said the drug ring relied on distributors who sold the drug to support their own methamphetamine habits. Distributors were recruited on

Northern Cheyenne march against meth

BY BECKY SHAY
Reprinted with permission from the Billings Gazette

LAME DEER - The war on meth marched through Lame Deer on Friday.

Several hundred people -- including small children in strollers, students carrying signs, and adults -- marched down Cheyenne Avenue in the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation's first large community event to combat methamphetamine use on the reservation.

The march led to a rally at the tribal headquarters, then continued to the school, where the afternoon included a feed and a series of speakers and entertainment.

"We have declared war on meth," Tribal President Eugene Little Coyote said to a round of applause and ululating. "But those are just words. We have now arrived at a time to turn our words into action." Members of a community task force, spearheaded by the tribal health board, are the generals in the war, Little Coyote said. He called on the Tribal Council to target manufacturers and dealers.

Members of the community will have to work together to fight meth in their families, their towns and their tribe, he said. That will include speaking out when they need to and supporting law enforcement.

Request to join task force

Little Coyote said he expects to ask the Tribal Council next week to join a Cooperative Agency Task Force that is being created and includes law enforcement from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the FBI and Colstrip. There is already a drug task force working, but this group will be another tool in the fight.

Caregivers train on elder abuse

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Staff

MISSION - The RST Caregivers Program administered by Sharon Swift and assisted by Vista volunteer Megan Gesino held a training session spanning two days for law enforcement, social services, medical personnel and other caregivers who come into firsthand and initial contact with RST tribal elders. A third day was added to alert Elders of any state and federal benefits they may be entitled to during the AARP Benefits Check-up Day. The National Legal Training Project of the AARP Foundation of Washington, D.C. funded the training that covered the cost of the materials, and the trainers.

The two day training session was held at the Bishop Harold Jones building; Caregiver program director, Sharon Swift, gave the opening remarks, while the facilitator on-site was Imani Woody. Mike Cross of Kyle delivered the opening and closing prayers in Lakota, while Swift and Gesino registered participants and disseminated a number of valuable reference materials on the topic of elders. The first day of training was on how to spot elder abuse and the rights of elders. Many elders attended both trainings.

Imani Woody is a training specialist with the National Legal Training Project of AARP facilitated both training sessions. She said, "Elder abuse is escalating across the United States and in Indian

Elder abuse training in Rosebud

Country because there are more people growing old. is infringing on their rights. NLTP wants to build a collaboration at Rosebud. We hope that the tribal code will be approved and enforced.

Two publications entitled "Elder Abuse" training module and another "Enhancing Law Enforcement Response to Elderly Crime Victims" were published by the National Legal Training Project of the AARP in Washington, D.C. The elder abuse module provides a quick overview of legislation and statistics which describe elder abuse nationwide.

A nationwide state by state listing to call for domestic elder abuser is given, while an elder abuse assessment wheel is also illustrated in order to guide an elder abuse advocate in devising an intervention plan if needed.

The other publication provided a profile of an aging population, while describing the many ways in which the elderly are victimized, while suggesting ways to effectively respond to elderly abuse. A draft tribal code was also handed out entitled, the Rosebud Sioux Lakota Tribal Elder and Handicapped Adult Protection Code.

It appears to be a rather comprehensive document that provides definitions connected with elder abuse and what an elder protection team is charged with.

According to Swift, "The Caregivers program has evolved from a program that originally had as its mission the long term care of the elderly to one that is currently more advocacy oriented for the elderly in the area of transportation, aging issues, housing and social services."

She noted that she was disappointed at the turnout the first day, however, the second day saw up to 30 training participants. On the third day, an elder benefits day was held at the SGU multipurpose building in Antelope.

May is "Older Americans Month" according to Swift and she noted that the Caregivers receive calls each week about some elder being abused. Elder abuse is occurring on the Rosebud reservation and no one is being prosecuted, she said. Swift also noted that there is no elder abuse protection team on the reservation and one is needed to address elder abuse and exploitation.

Mark Michel, a detective with the San Diego, Calif. police department is a consultant of the AARP Foundation NLTP and provided the training on Elder Abuse and Law Enforcement.

He works out of the Family Justice Center and conducts elder abuse investigations. He noted that there are some 2,800 elders on the Rosebud Sioux reservation and the crime rate is 3-4 times the national average.

The elder population is going to increase 20-25 percent in the coming years and this, in turn, will lead to the need for new legislation and impact social and law enforcement services. An important point noted by Michel was that if the elderly experience a loss in property is can be devastating. He said, "If an elder has a loss, they are thirteen times more likely to die. Elders can't go out and earn an income so the loss is hard to recoup if they lose their nest egg.

It is a crime against the person. The dynamic of elder abuse is difficult because the offender often lives with the elder. They know that if they report this, there will be repercussions. The family dynamic protects the person doing it."

On the second day of training, Michel used a PowerPoint presentation to highlight a number of topics relative to elder abuse. He spoke of offender profiles, common methods and tools that people use to defraud elders of their money and possessions, investigative considerations, victim interviewing, evidence gathering, etc.

Michel said, "You all know that you have to report abuse, but what is missing is the training. How do we recognize it? There are 'red flags' which are listed in the AARP handout."

the Wind River Indian Reservation, in Fremont County in Wyoming, on the Rosebud, Pine Ridge and Yankton reservations in South Dakota and on the Santee Reservation in Nebraska, authorities said.

Jeffrey D. Sweetin of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration said at the time that Sagaste-Cruz exploited jurisdictional loopholes on reservations. Sweetin called him ``a predator who targeted Native Americans in order to make a profit.''

Sagaste-Cruz was convicted in 2005 on charges of distribution of methamphetamine and conspiracy.

Gaither said there was no evidence presented during Sagaste-Cruz's trial that he was responsible for Gilliam's gun or that he owned or used a gun. He said Sagaste-Cruz's attorney during the trial and sentencing hearing failed to object to information about Gilliam's firearm that was contained in a presentencing report prepared by probation officers.

Appeals court judges questioned Gaither about whether removing the sentence enhancement for firearm possession would make a difference in sentence calculations, saying if Sagaste-Cruz could still get a life sentence without the gun finding, any error might not matter.

Gaither argued that because it is a life sentence, any recalculation would matter.

``The firearm and aspect of violence could be the only thing that triggered a life sentence,'' Gaither said.

He also argued that there was not enough evidence to prove Sagaste-Cruz was an organizer or director of the drug ring.

The judges did not indicate when they would rule.

"There is strength in numbers to fight meth," Little Coyote said.

Shanaya Sandcrane, 12, was among the students who carried signs and marched. Shanaya said the rally had an effect.

"I think it should make a difference," she said. Meth "seems like it's had an effect on a lot of people here."

People should not use it, Shanaya said, "because there's nothing good coming out of it."

Don Shoulderblade, Keeper of the Sacred Hat, one of the tribe's convenants, said the hat has been with the Cheyenne people through all their battles.

"Today she's still with us in the battle with drug abuse," he said.

"Meth is a destroyer," he said. "It destroys lives, it destroys home, it destroys your health and, most of all, it destroys your spirit."

After his talk, Shoulderblade gave a prayer, partially spoken in English, and asked the creator, Maheo, to watch over the Cheyenne people and lead them on the right path.

"The meth that is tearing up our families, destroying our homes, take it away, Maheo," he prayed.

Several Tribal Council members encouraged residents to not only refuse to use methamphetamine, but to speak up when they know others are using.

A challenge not to use

Not using is a challenge, Lame Deer District council member Allen Fisher said.

"That's not easy when you have methamphetamine promotion out there," Fisher said.

And it takes bravery to speak out against others using the drug.

"Learn to ask for help," Fisher said. "Do not cover it up. Make some changes. Take a stance of nonuse."

Ashland District Councilman Joe Fox Jr. said the rally will take hold of those who attended, especially the many children in attendance.

"I truly believe the Cheyenne people have to heal each other, and this is a start," Fox said.

Birney District Councilwoman Alberta Fisher talked of children and adults who are afraid, hungry and having financial troubles.

"These are all the effects of meth, alcohol and drugs," she said.

Fisher said she has family and friends who use meth.

"We bury people, and they bring us many tears, they bring us many hardships," she said. "And yet we fail to go to the source of the problem and put them in jail.

"Let's get to the source of the problem, and that's the drug dealers. Prosecute them. Don't be afraid. They are the ones that are killing us."

Lame Deer District Councilman Jace Killsback said drug users have "no shame" and will smoke meth in public. Using the slang of his 20-something generation, Killsback said they "light a bulb in their car downtown."

People have to speak out -- just as they did at the march and rally -- when they see drugs being used or sold, Killsback said. A call to police is the first step, he said.

"Don't be afraid to call in if you see somebody all geeked out or that's dealing drugs," he said.

representatives voted unanimously to help KILI out.

"We need KILI back on right away, we all depend on the station for every day news and information and especially for emergency info," said Ernie Little, Loneman School board member, "Loneman is going a step farther and setting up an annual contract for $5,000 for KILI to help provide a solid base of funding."

While KILI waits for word on the PTFP proposal and puts together the match, the station is looking at putting up a temporary one bay antenna that would possibly hit Pine Ridge, Wounded Knee, Manderson, Porcupine, Sharps, Kyle, Allen and Batesland.

"We are working really hard to get back on the air as soon as possible," said Janis, "we will be back on the air better than ever and ready for the next 20-30 years but I just cannot put a date to our plans. Everywhere we go people stop us and ask us when will KILI be back on the air."

Times coordinates Rosebud bureau to better serve Sicangu

ROSEBUD - The Lakota Country Times located between the Pine Ridge and Rosebud Sioux reservations has announced the opening of its Rosebud Bureau. The bureau will be able to respond to requests from institutions, tribal entities, private businesses and the community to cover local events and carry local advertisements, both legal and routine.

The Times has covered more 100 community events, tribal council meetings, and other cultural, economic and social functions over the last year and a half on the Rosebud reservation and will continue to serve that function. Amanda Takes War Bonnett is the editor, publisher and part owner and views the opening of a Rosebud bureau as a convenient and culturally sensitive way to respond to the information needs of the Sicangu Nation.

Takes War Bonnett said Dr. Archie Beauvais has been correspondent for the paper for the past year and has been writing articles from Rosebud and with the higher demand, we decided to open a bureau at Rosebud to make it easier for people to access the newspaper.

The Times will report Lakota news, events, and sports in a professional manner that is reflective of a Lakota spirit, while being essentially a 'watchdog' for legislation at all levels which impact the Sicangu Nation.

In order to make contact with the LCT's Rosebud Bureau please contact Dr. Archie Beauvais at 856-4745.

State birth rate tops national average

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) The latest statistics show the birth rate in South Dakota is 15 for every 1,000 people, slightly above the national rate of 14 per 1,000, according to the state Department of Health.

Seventy-nine percent of the nearly 11,000 babies born each year in South Dakota have white mothers. American Indian women account for 18 percent of births, and other races make up the rest.

Doctors delivered 93 percent of the babies; certified nurse midwives assisted with most of the rest.

Four Directions walk unites Oyate for Health and Diabetes awareness

BY NASTASHA D. BORDEAUX
RST Diabetes Prevention Program

ROSEBUD – United against diabetes, the Rosebud Reservation community joined together for a walk of prayer and reflection on May 3 at the Second Annual Four Directions Walk in Rosebud.

Sponsored by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Diabetes Prevention Program and SGU Diabetes Initiative, the annual walk symbolizes the unification and dedication of the Sicangu Oyate's hearts, minds and prayers in an effort to prevent diabetes.

With 428 participants from across the Rosebud Reservation participating in the walk, Connie Brushbreaker, Director of RST Diabetes Prevention Program, hopes this annual event will soon become a symbol of triumph over the disease that has already taken its toll on the health of the Sicangu Oyate.

"We hope the walk will bring attention to the need for regular, daily exercise and the need for everyone to make healthy changes to their diets," said Brushbreaker. "Type 2 diabetes is not just something you get from getting older; it is a disease that is brought on ourselves by lack of exercise and by consuming more food than we need for energy. We hope this Four Directions walk will inspire some to make healthy changes today, before diabetes has a chance to set in."

RST President Rodney Bordeaux offered a welcoming address to all the participants before the walk. He urged the public to make an effort to keep up daily exercise.

He noted that at 54 years-old, he himself did not have diabetes and attributed that to an active lifestyle.

"I feel this walk is important and I wanted to show the administration is in full support of the efforts toward the prevention of diabetes and of stressing the importance of living healthy active lifestyle," Bordeaux said.

He said he felt it is very important to teach the youth to live in a healthy way. "If we can convey to each child -- at early age -- that regular exercise and a good diet will prevent diabetes then, I think they have a good start in the right direction," said Bordeaux.

All 428 participants in the walk received a yellow, red, black, or white t-shirt which corresponded to the color representing the direction they walked in from.

Each direction was lead by a local spiritual leader and each direction was lead by an eagle staff.

A drum group rode ahead of each group of walkers, representing the heartbeat, "the unity" of the people walking and praying together. Eagle Creek, Red Leaf, and Wateca Drum Group (of Rosebud Elementary) each lead a group of walkers.

A traditional meal of soup, wojapi and frybread followed the walk.

Brushbreaker felt the walk event was a success and that the diabetes prevention message reached many. She was also happy that so many came out to support each other in their healthy choices.

"We as a people can help each other adopt healthier lifestyles by being supportive and recognizing each other's individual efforts; whether it is daily walking or simply ordering the small size fries instead of the large. A pat on the back, a thumbs-up, or even a 'way to go' goes along way to keep a person on the path to good health" said Brushbreaker.

City of Martin must fix its racial injustice

A federal appeals court has reinstated a Native American voting-rights lawsuit against the city of Martin, with two key points:

It's clear from "the absence of Native American aldermen, combined with evidence of racially polarized voting" that there are problems.

If districts need to be redrawn, "the city should get a chance to do so."

Both points make perfect sense.

U.S. District Judge Karen Schreier ruled in favor of the city last year, saying the suit failed to show that the white majority usually voted in ways to defeat candidates preferred by Native Americans. The ACLU, suing on behalf of two Native American voters, argued that districts had been drawn in such a way as to dilute Native American voting.

In reinstating the suit, the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals sends the question back to Schreier for more hearings.

Isn't it time to just end this? Decide that purposely or not, Native Americans have been closed out of the electoral process, and it's time to fix the problem.

Never-ending court proceedings won't help anyone. City leaders need to come to grips with the problems and solve them.

Things to empower yourself

Tasha Standing Soldier - an inspiration for others

By Patty Pourier

Meth use, gangs, alcoholism, unemployment, drop out rates in our schools, lack of a work force, politica upheaval…these are standard topics on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Sometimes, I think we get so used to failures, we are jealous of true successes we have on our reservations. What about the success stories?

We rarely hear about those.

Has our culture come to the point that to hear of a success in someone else's life makes us jealous because we have not been successful in our own?

Is success a bad seven-letter word? Is it more socially acceptable to be unsuccessful than to achieve our dreams?

I am going to briefly share a success story and would welcome to hear from our readers about any other success stories in their lives or their family lives.

Tasha Standing Solider successfully attended her freshman year of high school at an all girls' school in Colorado.

Odds are she would not have been able to complete a full year of school away from her family, her friends, her home, and her reservation.

She graduated after attending three years of high school at Little Wound School.

Statistics show that most girls entering high school at Little Wound will not graduate.

She had a son, Damon, and as a single mother continued her education starting at Oglala Lakota College.

Most single mothers do not attend college.

Tasha then went on to further her dreams and education at South Dakota State University, six hours from home, in Brookings.

She had her son with her, and cared for him while attending school. She lived away from her family support system.

To a non-reservation reader, this may not be a big deal, but to someone who grew up on the reservation, it is a big deal to be able to move off the reservation, with a child, and consistently continue to thrive.

Next, she completed an internship during the summer at Chadron, Neb.,a border town to the reservation. She had to establish new day care for three months, and new living arrangements.

Tasha then went back to South Dakota State University to complete her Doctorate in Pharmacy.

She graduated May 5, 2006, against all odds.

It took her seven years to accomplish her goals and she did it. After graduation she was accepted in the Air Force and will be a pharmacist within the Air Force.

I applaud Tasha, her mother Denise Pourier and her sister Jamie and her brother Ted for the great success story this is and against all odds, we want to recognize her accomplishment.

Thank you for the wonderful job you do

Dear Editor,

Love your new online format. You ask why is a woman in Rhode Island reading the Lakota Country Times. Many reasons one I love your people and I have been working with a group known as Friends of Pine Ridge Reservation.

I was out there in 1995 and came home heart sick and all I could think to do was send clothes, yarn and other things to your beautiful people,

Yes I grew up poor, but not poor, poor, but I have done much reading of history and many books over the years. Has been a habit if I don't understand I read.

Have had the joy of sending books to the schools and many other things.

I felt great joy when all the seniors at Red Cloud are going to college could not be prouder than if they had been my own children.

Also reading Sadie In The Wood's article about going to Duke University and I stand in my home clapping and blessing her and her future.

I'm sorry that the KILI Radio Station is down and I will try to send some money for I know that it is the link to all and being a former radio disc jockey know that is important for every thing is so spread out.

Though I am far I feel very near and have found that my heart is on Pine Ridge with Creators blessings I hope to go back next year.

Question: Saw the badlands how did any one find their way out of there.

Again thank you for the wonderful job that you do .

What can be done about police discrimination?

Dear Editor:

I am concerned about how the Martin City officers are treating individuals that are disabled and throwing them down and abusing the individual even when they are intoxicated. I think they should at least show a little respect.

They shouldn't have to use pepper spray on them to arrest them. There's this one certain individual officer that uses force on individuals who is really abusive. He stops people and pulls them over for no apparent reason. I wish the county and the city would quit disputing and get their act together and take a look at what's really going on in Bennett County. This is a racist town, no taking sides. It shouldn't make a difference on what color they are or what or whom they are.

They also shouldn't have to break a door down, just arrest some individuals just because she/he is intoxicated. I am a concerned person and had this happen to me and believe me, no white person would like it if an officer came and broke down their door. The officier don't have to pay to have the door fixed. We have to replace it ourselves, and that is money out of our pockets. What if we didn't have that kind of money.

I get BIA general assistance and that's not very much to even pay bills monthly.

Recently there was an incident where two male individuals who fought and they were relatives and one was injured. The injured one was taken to Winner jail and the other walked away. He should have gone to jail also and held for the same thing. The one who is sitting in jail is incompetent and is on SSI. I think that is discrimination. Just because one is working someplace to back him 100 percent. What can be done about discrimination like this?

Mothers are the hub of the wheel

Dear Editor:

We will look into the word of God and he made a way for us.

In the book of Ephesians, Chapter 5, verses 22-33, are these words, "Wives, submit to your husbands as to the Lord."

For the husband is the head of the household and the wife as Christ is the head of the church, his body, of which he is the Savior.

Now as the church submits to Christ, so also wives should submit to their husbands.

Husbands, love your wife, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, and to present to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless.

He who loves his wife loves himself. After all, no one ever hated his own body, but he feeds and cares for it, just as Christ does the Church - for we are members of his body.

However, each of you also must love his wife as he loves himself, and the wife must respect her husband.

Many women will say if husbands are to love their wives, why does my husband beat me up?

Remember getting beat up is not love. If you are getting beat up, why?

When you love your husband, you are to forgive him. Remember men are not perfect and they forget things too, like your birthday or your anniversary or your favorite food or whatever you get upset about.

God gave us women a very important job, he made us to be homemakers, one who stays at home and makes a house a home.

We are to be at home when our children come home from school, we are to have a meal cooked for our families when our husband comes home from work. Remember when a husband is working around outside the home, he is keeping the place clean and orderly for the protection of his family.

We should all work to keep our homes clean and orderly, make sure the children have clean clothes for school.

We are to be in control of the food department, make sure you have enough food for the month, buy things in bulk if possible.

If at all possible, stay away from precooked foods, they cost too much and do not last. Think about what your family likes to eat and make your meals accordingly.

I do not mean pop, potato, chips, candy bars, or any other fast food that is not good for them. Remember we are created from the Earth, so our bodies needs lots of vegetables and fruits to keep us healthy.

Many families feed their children too much fried foods and too much sugar, so many of the children are overweight and many have health problems.

When you eat meat do not fry it, the grease is what is not good for you. Do like our ancestors did, they roasted and boiled and dried it, that is why they are able to survive the weather.

We are also to make sure our family is ready for the winter months, start getting ready in the summer and the fall, making quilts in the summer months, buying the winter clothes, snow boots, gloves and mittens in the fall, so when the snow starts to come down, your family will be ready for it. Be a praying woman and teach your children to do what is right and try your best to keep them from the wrong. Remember you are an example for your children.

Help your husband to be a good example to the children. Remember, you are your husband's helper.

Mothers are like the hub of the wheel, we hold our families together.

Commencement is an act of inspiring others

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Ordinarily, I don't go to a lot of commencement celebrations at any level, as I am kind of lazy. But, the other issue is that the auditorium is usually jam packed and so humid that the internal temperature can be uncomfortable. I can recall a time when my mother and I went to a commencement at SDSU for my younger sister. It was so crowded by the time that we got there that we simply sat in the lobby and waited. It wasn't a very memorable experience for us other than the crowded conditions.

I have also given several commencement addresses and was able to make it through the duration and I was always thankful of that. I will be giving a short talk at White Eagle Christian Academy soon and this will be my fourth time and by now they are tired of my same old ideas, but in the Lakota way four times is good.

I like the commencements that are held outdoors as the fresh air flows freely and people can move about unimpeded. I attended commencement ceremonies at Harvard University in 1981 prior to the year that I was scheduled to get my diploma and that was fun because it was held outside in what they call Harvard Yard, the home to the undergraduates.

I couldn't remember anything about that experience other than the speaker was some foreign dignitary. I was sorry to say that I didn't go back the following year to go through ceremonies.

I honestly think that young people need to attend their graduation and receive their diplomas and experience the great honor of having accomplished something and bring closure to that part of their lives. If nothing else, I think it is good to hold your own honoring party at home and celebrate and then, move on to greater challenges.

One thing we fail to think about, is that when we reach a milestone like graduation, it also inspires others who are coming behind us and who would love to be where we are on the stage. You can just see others as they are mentally figuring the months or years when they will also matriculate and go onto college, the military or filter into the workforce.

I attended several commencement related functions and a memorial dinner over the weekend and I was rather honored to be invited to each one. As a writer and someone who has worked to inspire Lakota people simply by my achievements in higher education, it is equally as inspiring for me when someone comes up and says that they had followed in my footsteps.

As I was leaving a memorial dinner at my friend Pat Bad Hand's house yesterday I stopped to acknowledge a former colleague, Pat Eagle Elk.

She told me that I had been an inspiration to her and that she had gone on and completed a Ph.D in clinical psychology.

That revelation made me proud of Pat and proud of my work on the Rosebud. It's one of the reasons that I advise and assist Sicangu people who wish to continue their education beyond the undergraduate level.

I sometimes hear people say, "If I can reach out and help one person than what will have made my work all the worth it." It was the kind of feeling that I had as I watch those young people being honored.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (nagik sapa) Sicangu Lakota, is a decorated Vietnam Veteran with a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and resides on the Rosebud.

Notes From Indian Country

Escaping the net of the 'Dropout Nation'

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

"Reading, riting and rithmatic, taught to the tune of a hickory stick," probably says more about early America than most of us dare to remember.

It was not uncommon for teachers to have a hickory stick or a ping-pong paddle within easy reach and to use these tools to punish unruly children. As a matter of fact, parents expected that their children be paddled or spanked if they acted up in school.

In fact, spanking at home by both parents was perfectly acceptable in the society when I was young. Although I don't recall either of my parents using this form of discipline on me I observed it in other families, especially when I moved from the Indian reservation to the city.

The traditional Lakota families seldom used physical force to discipline their children. A sharp look and a "hiya," (no) usually did the trick. I can still hear my father's "hiya" that brought me to a halt if I was doing something mischievous.

I am sure that is why it was such a cultural shock for so many Indian children when they were shipped off to the boarding schools operated by the US Government and the Christian churches in the 1800s and into the middle 1900s. When I first saw a Catholic priest beat a classmate of mine with a leather strap for an infraction it was a very traumatic experience

But just as the children of the early settlers survived the hickory stick, many of the Indian children survived the boarding schools. And if I were a statistician, I would probably say that 50 percent of them did not.

We are now in a new time and a new place. The world has grown much smaller thanks to the Internet. Even on remote schools far out on Indian reservations the children now have access to computers. Instead of just learning from books and newspapers, the children of today have all of the vast resources of Google and Microsoft at their command.

And this is the time of the year when they don their caps and gowns and march to the podiums to receive their high school diplomas or their college degrees. If I spoke at a graduation ceremony this year of 2006, I would have this to say to those Native American high school graduates:

"To those of you seated before me wearing your colors of graduation, I am very proud of you. You have stuck with something to its conclusion. Although many of you have lived in poverty, oftentimes never knowing if there would be breakfast on the table or clean clothes to wear, and although many of you have tried to help your parents overcome their addictions and have had to conquer your own fears in the process, the fact that you are about to receive a diploma after 12 years of discipline, commitment, and oftentimes uncertainty, it tells me more about you as a person than about the award you are about to receive.

During these 12 years of trials and tribulations, you have seen many of your closest friends walk through those doors never to return. You have learned that 50 percent of the children that started out with you 12 years ago never stuck around to finish school. You have seen these friends working at menial jobs, driving their own cars, and even snickering at you for your commitment to getting that diploma.

As John Reynor wrote this week in the Indian Education Today Magazine, many Indian schools have joined the ranks of the "Dropout Nation." The fact that you stood your ground against all odds and are seated here today to receive that diploma speaks volumes about your courage and determination.

Some of you will go on to colleges off of the reservation and other will take advantage of the fantastic opportunities afforded them through the 36 Indian owned and operated colleges on the many Indian reservations in this country. Colleges like Oglala Lakota College, Dine' College, Sinte Gleska University, and Sitting Bull College are now at your very doorstep and these great colleges are probably America's best kept secret.

Right here in Indian country you will find great educators and college presidents like Tom Short Bull of Oglala Lakota College and one of my idols of all time, Lionel Bordeaux of Sinte Gleska University. These are Lakota leaders that have paved the way for you to be able to get a college degree on your own reservation.

The "Dropout Nation" can no longer tempt you or claim you. You have reached that first rung of the ladder that will lead you to a better life. There are still several rungs left to climb, but you have survived the hardest of times, the worst of times, and the most difficult of times to earn that diploma you soon will hold in your hands.

But as you reach for the next rung on the ladder, never ever forget who you are and where you came from. You are Lakota and you will always be Lakota and you will always live in the light of Crazy Horse, Red Cloud, Sitting Bull, Spotted Tail and all of the other great chiefs and warriors who made it possible for you to be seated here today. They gave their lives so that you could live."

METH.

One hit, one death: family of Chantel Wilson promotes awareness

Task force proposes stronger drug laws, including dis-enrollment

BY ANDY HARVEY
KELO Land News
Reprinted with permission

PINE RIDGE - She had just started high school and looked to have a promising future, but Chantel Wilson never finished her freshmen year. She died after trying meth just once, on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Over the years, methamphetamine has taken ahold of communities across the reservation.

Whether learning how to fish, having fun in front of the camera, or hanging out with friends...Chantel Smith was always full of energy.

Mother Connie Wilson said, "She was active in basketball and volleyball."

Older Sister Alicia Wilson said, "I have a daughter and she's her auntie. She just did everything for her. She was a good auntie."

But on November 18th, 2005, this vivacious daughter, sister and aunt faced a dangerous situation. She was home alone when a familiar visitor stopped by.

Connie Wilson said, "She was driving by and had no where to go to do her meth and I was not home so she pulled in to my house."

What the woman did next changed the family forever.

Connie Wilson said, "Smoked it on a tin foil with my daughter. My daughter had taken one hit of meth."

It was Chantel's first time. But instead of getting a high-Alicia Wilson said, "She said my head hurts. My head hurts. I'm going to go outside and get some fresh air."

Chantel Wilson.

Older sister Alicia Wilson was down the street when relatives came knocking on her door.

Alicia Wilson said, "She was on her trampoline when I got there."

Chantel had collapsed.

Connie Wilson said, "She had a brain aneurism. She died within seconds after she took a hit of meth. My daughter was 15, just turned 15."

Her family is still trying to understand why she tried meth that day.

Connie Wilson said, "You know my daughter was a teenager and they're curious and they are going to try things for the first time."

While they may never know why, the family is using Chantel's story to warn others about the dangers of Meth.

Connie Wilson said, "I would like to spread it and share it with others. I'm a hurting mother right now and I wouldn't like anyone else to feel the way I feel."

Alicia Wilson said, "People are just in awe. I've even seen a couple people start crying. Hearing it from her sister probably hits home than more than just another speaker."

They aren't alone in their efforts. Georgine Looks Twice started the Oglala Lakota Methamphetamine Prevention Task Force more than a year ago; she was concerned the meth problem on the reservation was being overlooked.

Looks Twice said, "A lot of it had to do with not understanding. We don't understand what this is. We don't understand what the problem is. We don't know what meth is."

The task force conducts community surveys to figure out just how many people are using meth. They've already learned that the reservation is a meth dealer's paradise.

Looks Twice said, "Well the greater concentration is here in Pine Ridge village. The eastern part of the reservation is suffering a lot more."

Some are even starting to use as young as eight.

Looks Twice said, "We are more susceptible because we are Native Americans, because there is a lot of addiction rate here, a high alcoholism rate on the Pine Ridge reservation. We are a lot more susceptible to these kinds of drugs."

Currently, tribal laws dealing with drugs are not very strong and don't address meth specifically, so the task force is trying to create tougher laws.

Under the proposed law, first time offenders would go to jail and get treatment. Second time offenders would also serve time in jail and face a temporary banishment from the reservation. Third time offenders would be banished for life and dis-enrolled from the tribe.

Looks Twice said, "I don't want my grandchildren to be impacted by methamphetamine. And I look at all the little ones and somebody's got to do it."

But the lack of funds could slow the efforts...which is why Looks Twice is glad people who've been affected by meth are sharing their stories.

Connie Wilson said, "My daughter took one hit and it killed her. She was a child. She never had a future. Her future is gone now."

But by talking about what happened to her daughter, Wilson hopes to make the future better for others on the reservation.The reservation task force is working on applying for a $350,000.00 grant. The tribe has set aside a day in November to honor Chantel Wilson and remind people about the war on methamphetamine.

Canadian cabinet approves $1.9 billion package for boarding school abuse victims

SASKATCHENWAN -- The federal cabinet has approved a $1.9-billion deal to compensate former students at native residential schools, many of whom suffered physical and sexual abuse.

"This government recognizes the sad legacy of residential schools," Indian Affairs Minister Jim Prentice said last Wednesday in the Commons.

"We hope that today's announcement will bring closure to former students and their descendants. The settlement is just and honourable."

The deal offers any former student a lump sum of $10,000 each, plus $3,000 for each year spent in the schools. It is estimated there are 80,000 people alive today who attended Indian residential schools, according to Statistics Canada.

Those who were age 65 or older as of May 30, 2005, are immediately eligible for an $8,000 advance payment. Descendants of those who died after that date can also apply for compensation.

The average age of the former students is 60, but many are sick and living in poverty. Native leaders and the opposition are pressuring the government to fast-track cheques to the sick and elderly.

Former students who say they were sexually or physically abused can file separate claims to seek additional compensation.

It must still be approved by courts in several provinces.

For decades, natives had been fighting to have the government recognize the abuses they suffered in the school system that Ottawa supported financially between the 1870s and 1970s.

Tens of thousands of First Nations young people were taken from their families for months at a time and deprived of their culture and many were sexually or physically abused by school staff.

In 1998, Ottawa acknowledged that there was widespread abuse at the schools and offered an apology to the victims.

Thousands of former students have already filed claims.This final deal builds on the agreement in principle reached last November when the Liberals were in power.

Court upholds Wicahpe Milk's murder conviction

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - A federal appeals court has upheld the second-degree murder conviction and sentence imposed on a Wanblee man for a killing on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Wicahpe Milk's appeal in federal court alleged insufficient evidence, evidentiary errors and prosecutorial misconduct. He also said his prison sentence of 111/4 years was unreasonable.

A three-judge panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected all parts of his appeal.

Milk was convicted by a jury of killing Arlen Bissonette, 20, of Pine Ridge in an October 2004 fight.

- - Water Conservation Methods - -

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 5th year of drought conditions and every drop of water is precious. Here are some crucial water conservation measures:

- - Be Water-Wise Outdoors - -

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

- - Be Water-Wise Indoors - -

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

Brave Heart receives Hazelden Foundation award for work in addiction recovery

RAPID CITY, (AP) - A Pine Ridge man has been honored for his work in addiction recovery from the Hazelden Foundation, one of the leading centers for addiction recovery in the world.

Basil Brave Heart, a retired educator and longtime addiction recovery counselor, received the C.A.R.E. Award from the Hazelden Foundation in a ceremony May 6 during the foundation's Annual Alive and Free Workshop at Center City, Minn.

Hazelden gives the C.A.R.E (Consistent Activity in Recovery in Education) award to one individual each year for extraordinary service to the Hazelden recovery community.

Brave Heart received the award for his service and commitment to helping those in recovery, according to a Hazelden news release.

He accepted the award on behalf of the Lakota Nation, saying, ``This recognition goes out to all the recovering Native Americans and is a result of the grace offered me by our creator. Sobriety is a gift I have been given by the creator and I'm just giving it back."

Brave Heart, 73, a native of Pine Ridge, completed counselor training at Hazelden in 1973.

Since then, he has worked for school systems in Montana, Wyoming and South Dakota as an administrator and has helped institute chemical dependency programs in schools and on American Indian reservations.

Hazelden officials said Brave Heart has referred roughly 100 people for treatment at Hazelden and has sent approximately 150 educators and other professionals to Hazelden for training in addiction recovery.

He helped start the Hope Lodge halfway house and a chemical dependency program at Loneman School at Oglala. He also directed the employee assistance program and treatment program at Little Wound School at Kyle.

Also during those years, Brave Heart initiated the Circle of Hope program, which gathered reservation school administrators and counselors to share information and resources to combat alcoholism and drug addiction in the schools and the community.

Picky eaters: limited choices means limited health

BY NATASHA D. BORDEAUX
Rosebud Sioux Tribe
Diabetes Pevention Program

Picky eaters are a tough bunch to please.

No onions, tomatoes, only beef (well-done), no chicken-on-the-bone, nothing with garlic, no green stuff, definitely no bison meat, no sea-bugs (shrimp), "I hate fish," "I won't eat Chinese (or any other foreign food)," no frozen vegetables, nothing too crunchy, nothing too mushy, only green bananas, nothing too spicy …

Sheeesh!

We all know someone like that. In fact, on the rez, most people are like that. If it ain't commods or McDonald's it probably won't fly.

Picky eaters take pride in their selectivity. Picky eaters envision themselves as connoisseurs of "only the finest" meals.

I have a niece, who is one of those types of "connoisseurs." She eats macaroni and cheese, ramen noodles, Cheetos and apple juice and not much of anything else. She found what she likes and doesn't care to try anything else.

Picky eaters are the same everywhere. They eat a lot of carbs in the form of breads and pastas, they eat a lot of fat through fried foods and cheeses, they consume a lot of sugar in sweets and sauces like ketchup and the protein they consume usually comes in the form of fatty red meat. The vegetables they eat are few and far between, fitting in wherever their standards can allow, if ever. And their fruit is usually found in the form of juice.

In short, the diet of most picky eaters is poor. They lack the vitamins and minerals that ensure proper brain and body function. They overload their bodies on those nutrients that damage their bodies -- like fat and sugars.

Picky eaters are mostly averted to foods that are "new" or "different" in taste, texture, or smell. But having never tried anything outside their comfort zone, everything is new or different.

I feel sorry for picky eaters. I get so much joy and satisfaction of trying new foods with new textures and new spices. I can't imagine ever eating as simply as some people limit themselves. The world is so much more enticing and pleasant when you see it through the abundance of smells, textures and tastes the world has to offer.

I especially feel sorry for those picky eaters that have found themselves a little or a lot overweight and need to change their diet. They have left themselves so little room to adopt change.

To help those, my first suggestion is to take a multi-vitamin and calcium supplement every day.

Next I would recommend looking at the portion sizes of the foods they do eat and try to see if they can't gradually reduce those sizes to come as close to the recommended serving sizes of each food.

Meat should be the size of a deck of cards, mac and cheese and other pastas should be the size of half a baseball.

Suggestions for healthy change are often to eat more whole grain foods like 100 percent whole grain bread, whole grain cereals, and whole wheat flour; eat low fat dairy products like skim milk, low fat yogurt, and an occasional low-fat cheese; add more lean meats like fish, turkey and chicken breast; add fresh vegetables like green salad, carrots, celery, cucumbers, tomatoes, asparagus, avocados, peppers, eggplant, squash, sweet potatoes, fresh green beans, snap peas, radishes and so on; also add more fresh fruit like grapes, oranges, grapefruit, apples, bananas, star fruit, pomegranates, papaya, strawberries, blackberries, and so on.

All these usual changes recommended toward a healthy diet probably leave the picky eater saying "YUCK!"

So what can they do?

Lean meats are easy to find in the deli. Smoked turkey breast, lean roast beef, lean ham or chicken breast make the beginnings of healthy sandwiches or wraps. Canned tuna, fresh shrimp, tilapia, salmon and many other white fish are also healthy options when baked or steamed.

Another suggestion is to use half the hamburger you usually use in a recipe but make sure you place it in a colander after it is cooked and rinse it with hot water for at least 30 seconds or longer until all the grease is rinsed clear. Then mix the hamburger with ground turkey breast or ground chicken breast that has been browned and broken up.

That will help lighten up some recipes. But remember, adding a ton of cheese on top of lean meat will only add unnecessary fat and calories.

If you must add cheese on a sandwich or on top of pasta use one thin slice or imagine the cheese as three dice and use no more. And familiarize yourself with low-fat cheese as it tastes the same as regular cheese with less fat.

Picky eaters are hard to please. But eating healthy is still possible with a little more work and effort. You have to try more things in different ways and stick with what works.

And parents, just a tip toward ensuring your child's health – you are not being mean by insisting your child eats healthily.

Make sure that you serve a wide variety of fruits and vegetables and insist your child tries (not finishes) everything on his or her plate. That means a full bite -- chewed and swallowed.

This one act could be the deciding factor in your child's lifelong eating habits, and the deciding factor in his or her health.

My recommendation is to experiment. Buy three fruits or vegetables each week that you have never liked or tried.

Prepare them in a healthy way and try them again. I mean really try them – not just one teeny tiny bite that you promptly spit out. I mean actually take a full bite, chew it, taste it and swallow it. If you still don't like it then put it aside for awhile.

After a week or so, try it again. In fact, don't give up on any food until you have prepared it and tried at least five times. If nothing else, you are setting a good example for the children in your life.

Make sure that no matter what you eat at each meal you include a fresh or frozen (not canned) vegetable.

I find that roasting or grilling a vegetable makes them hard to resist. I usually add a little olive oil, cracked pepper and kosher salt.

Most fruit is quite good with a little dip of low-fat yogurt mixed with a touch of honey.

Sicangu Elderly Concerns to hold 20th annual elder games

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - The Sicangu Elderly Concerns is sponsoring its 20th annual Elder Games at the old track on the campus of St. Francis Indian School.

The event will be held on Saturday, May 20 and will feature four age categories. Elders age 50-59, 60-69, 70-79 and 80 years and over will be competing for prizes in each category with both men and women's categories.

Sicangu medicine man, Roy Stone, will deliver the opening prayer in Lakota, while Richard Standing Bear, President of the Sicangu Elderly Concerns will give an opening address. Guest speakers will include Genevieve White Wing, Sam High Crane, and Phoebe Little Thunder.

Volunteers are needed for this event, which is supported entirely by donations from local businesses and volunteers, according to a press release from the Sicangu Elderly Concerns. The group does not solicit or receive public funds. The event is being announced on KINI FM radio and promises to be an enjoyable event for the Sicangu elders.

Registration will begin at 12:00 noon and the events are scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. The events that participants will compete in include a 50 yard walk, 100 yard walk, quarter mile walk 50 yard run, 100 yard run, and a quarter mile run. Horseshoes, softball throw, three legged races, and sack races are scheduled. A traditional Lakota "Shinney" game will be held after the track and field events.

All people over the age of 50 are invited to participate in the elder games; volunteers are also needed for this event and they are to report to the registration table at 12:00 noon. The Sicangu Elderly Concerns makes note of the fact that the age category of 70-79 appear to be the most active and this is indicative of the fact that many elders are not only living longer, but are becoming more healthy and leading a more active lifestyle.

Awards will be presented at the end of the days events. All ages are invited to attend and honor the Sicangu elders. The sponsors are not responsible for accidents or loss and no alcohol and drugs will be allowed at the event.

The elder games have been an annual event that has seen the participation of many Sicangu elders over the years.

It is a fun time as the younger Lakota people are able to witness their parents and grandparents having a fun outing while socializing with others whom they may have not seen in a while.

For more information call Chris Horvath, event coordinator at 856-2547 or Genevieve White Wing at 747-2657.

Tom Daschle at Pine Ridge during the 2004 election.

Daschle to keynote Indian journalism fundraiser

RAPID CITY - As the fundraiser for the Native American Journalists Foundation, Inc. draws near former U. S. Senator Tom Daschle is looking forward to his visit to Rapid City.

He said, "I am really looking forward to this event. First, because it is such an important cause. And second, because Tim Giago has been a remarkable force in Native American Journalism. This is one way for all of us to recognize his historic contribution."

Daschle will be the keynote speaker at the event to be held on June 6 at the Prairie Edge Trading Post in downtown Rapid City.

The date chosen for the even happens to coincide with the elections to be held that day. It will take place from 6:00 to 9:00 p.m.

The fundraiser hopes to bring in the money to provide journalism scholarships and summer internships to Native American students interested in pursuing a career in the media.

The president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Cecelia Fire Thunder will speak at the event and nationally famous hoop dancer, Jackie Bird, will perform.

The young drummers and singers from the Wildcats of the Todd County Schools will also perfom.

Christy Tibbitts, the Executive Director of the Native American Journalists Foundation, Inc., said, "Mr. Giago has given the last 35 years of his life to opening doors for Native Americans to get involved in the media. He built the largest Indian owned newspaper in America right here in Rapid City and after he sold it and resigned he decided to use his free time to create job opportunities for Native Americans in the media."

She continued, "This fundraiser will help our foundation provide scholarships for Indian students and to give some of the lucky ones a chance to actually work for several weeks in the summer at a local newspaper or at a television or radio station.

"There are not only opportunities for young Indian journalists in the mainstream media, but also at Indian newspapers and radio stations all over the west.

'All most of the students need is the opportunity to get through the door that has been closed to them for so long."

Prue, Lantz and Mack receive Combat Action Badge
Ceremony held at National Guard Armory

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

WINNER - Sicangu tribal members SGT Claude Prue, and SSG Charles Mack were awarded the "Combat Action Badge" which was authorized by the Secretary of the Army a year ago. Brian Lanz of St. Francis was also awarded the badge. Prue is from Okreek and Mack is from Mission. The three were with Detachment 1; Company A, 153 rd Battalion of the South Dakota National Guard based in Winner.

Their unit served in Iraq from February 2004-2005 and were attached to the 10th Mountain Light Infantry Brigade and hunted for roadside bombs in armored vehicles.

They found over 55 roadside bombs and more than 122 rounds which they destroyed.

Mack's 1st platoon was attacked by a group of 30 Iraqui insurgents on April 12, 2004 and were able to successfully repel the enemy which fired mortars, rocket propelled grenades, small arms fire and roadside bombs.

Specialist Lanz was in the same ambush with the 2d platoon and heard the 1st platoon's call for assistance. The four vehicle convoy was acted as a Quick Reaction Force and was able to help repel the enemy.

SGT Prue was taking part in a route clearance mission and acting as a security element for the 1st platoon.

A roadside bomb or IED (improved explosive device) exploded and disabled the truck Prue was riding in. It was the same attack in which Sgt. Dennis Morgan of Valentine, NE was killed.

The award ceremony was held at the Winner National Guard armory on May 6. Prue also received the Meritorious Service Medal for serving in the SD National Guard for over 20 years.

The Combat Action Badge is one which is awarded to any soldier and the criteria is that the, "Soldier must be performing assigned duties in an area where hostile fire pay or imminent danger pay is authorized. Soldiers must be personally present and actively engaging or being engaged by the enemy, and performing satisfactorily in accordance with the prescribed rules of engagement."

The Combat Action Badge is a silver badge that is two inches in width with a bayonet and a grenade.

Until a year ago, other U.S. Army personnel with certain military occupational specialties in the medical or infantry area could earn either the Combat Infantry Badge or the Combat Medical Badge, but neither one was deemed appropriate for those with other specialties, e.g. combat engineers and was not awarded to them.

The Combat Action Badge may be earned by U.S. Armed Forces personnel and foreign soldiers assigned to a U.S. Army unit, however, the unit assigned to must be not be one that would qualify a soldier for a CIB or CMB.

Captain Gregory Darlow, the Company A commander, emceed the award ceremony. He said, "In keep with the spirit of the Warrior Ethos, the Combat Action Badge provides special recognition to soldiers who personally engage the enemy." Major General Gorman concluded the ceremony by noting, "I cannot say enough how much you make me proud of this job and this country, thanks you."

Reconciliation center funding at issue

FORT PIERRE, S.D. (AP) - The state's congressional delegation is trying to secure more federal money for an American Indian reconciliation center being built near Fort Pierre, said Sen. Tim Johnson, D-S.D.

The project had been getting about $2 million a year in federal funds, but there is no money for it in the latest presidential budget.

Reconciliation center officials have requested the final $10.5 million for the project, which has been authorized by Congress but not provided.

The building will display tribal history, art and culture. It also will house an economic development center and possibly a Sioux Nation Supreme Court.

Meade County commission decision may be challenged

STURGIS, S.D. (AP) - The attorney for a group challenging a beer license for a campground biker bar near Bear Butte says the Meade County Commission's decision to reject petitions calling for a public vote on the issue will not stand up in court.

The South Dakota Supreme Court has struck down similar moves by county commissioners in the past, said Bruce Ellison.

American Indians and some rural neighbors of Bear Butte circulated a petition last month to put the liquor license issue on the ballot. The Meade County Commission decided it was an administrative decision that is not subject to a public vote.

Groups have protested campgrounds, bars and other commercial operations that are being located two to three miles from Bear Butte during the Sturgis motorcycle rally. They say the noise and activity interferes with their religious activities at the Butte.

Red Shirt School nearly complete

RED SHIRT (AP) - A twin-domed school being built at Red Shirt, on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, is nearly finished.

The building will replace four mobile units that have been used for some 30 years.

The old Red Shirt School now has about 50 children, but the new school was built to accommodate 120 students in kindergarten through eighth grade.

Officials say more students can attend in the fall because daily bus routes are being extended.

The school also is considering the addition of ninth grade.

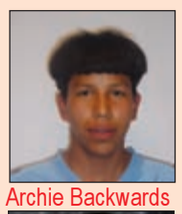
Supreme Court rejects tribal land case

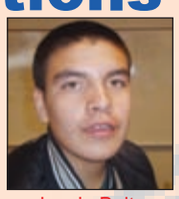
WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court refused Monday to consider whether the state of New York owed an Indian tribe about $250 million in a dispute over the seizure of tribal land.

Justices had been asked to consider a decision by the New York-based 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that dismissed the Cayuga Nation's 26-year-old land claim for several reasons, including the passage of time and the tribe's long delay in seeking relief.



A federal judge ruled in 1994 that New York state illegally acquired 64,015 acres of tribal land in Seneca and Cayuga counties in the late 1700s and early 1800s by entering into invalid treaties with the Cayugas.

A jury awarded the two tribes $37 million in damages in 2000 for the land's current worth and the loss of two centuries of fair market rental value. The judge added $211 million in interest.



Solicitor General Paul Clement told justices that if the appeals court decision is not thrown out, ``it will leave the United States and the affected tribes without any remedy for violations of law that, while `ancient,' were indisputably `grave.'"

New York lawyers had urged justices to reject separate appeals from the Bush administration and the tribe, saying it is 200 years too late for the claims.

Counting up what Indians are owed

BY JOHN HEILPRIN
Associated Press Writer

LENEXA, Kan. — Seventy feet beneath the prairie, the government is filling limestone caverns — protected by guards and a bomb-sniffing dog — with truckloads of American Indians' financial and cultural records.

What is ground zero for an accounting that will take seven years and cost $335 million owes its existence to a bitter class-action lawsuit brought against the Interior Department a decade ago. Still, it's only a short version of the historical accounting that Indians demanded but no longer want, because they do not think it can be done properly.

The Indians say the government mismanaged a trust in their names for 120 years and now owes them tens of billions of dollars.

The dispute dates to 1887, when Congress made the Interior Department the trustee for 145 million acres of Indian lands. Indians were supposed to benefit, but the government gave most of the land to white settlers.

Today, the department manages 10 million acres of trust land for individual Indians and 46 million acres for tribes. In 1996, the Indians sued to reconcile their historical accounts. The Indians, and Congress, demanded an audit. The Indians may be owed a century's worth of grazing rents, oil and gas royalties and timber sales from the land, plus interest.

Both the Indians and the Interior Department agree $13 billion was collected between 1909 and 2001.

The Indians had claimed the unpaid interest could be more than $150 billion, but have offered to drop the whole thing if the government coughs up $27.5 billion. They would spread the money among individual Indian accountholders, about one-fifth of the 2.5 million Indians now living in the U.S., mainly in the West.

No way, the Bush administration replied, saying the government all along has forwarded most of the rents and royalties to tribes and individual Indians."It could be just $30 million that's owed to the Indians," said Ross Swimmer, the department's special trustee for Indians. He also is a member of Oklahoma's Cherokee Nation.

During a tour of the Kansas cave, Swimmer and other department officials were eager to show that many more Indian records exist than people realize. They also wanted to demonstrate their ability to check the accuracy of financial transactions with Indians.

"They're finally going to get their accounting," Swimmer said. "For once we've gotten something right for the Indians."

In an irony befitting an "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" legal war, the government is relying on the Indian-demanded accounting — actually, it's a statistical sampling — to come up with figures that Indians claim low-ball what they are owed.

"It's a number in the m's, not the b's," said Fritz Scheuren, who oversees the department's sampling. Scheuren was president of the American Statistical Association last year.

The Indians who sued say now that too many records have been destroyed to come up with an accurate figure. Before 1990, the Treasury Department routinely destroyed the Indian trust's canceled checks, and court documents attest to numerous destroyed records.

"The documents that the government has preserved are a fraction of those that have been lost and destroyed," said Dennis Gingold, a lawyer for the Indians. "Massive hard copy and electronic destruction ... make the accounting legally and factually impossible."

The Indians' biggest ally is U.S. District Judge Royce Lamberth, a former Reagan administration official whose strongly worded rulings condemn the Interior Department.

After nine years presiding over the case, Lamberth concluded last July that the agency is a "pathetic outpost" that has bungled its fiduciary duty.

"For those harboring hope that the stories of murder, dispossession, forced marches, assimilationist policy programs, and other incidents of cultural genocide against the Indians are merely the echoes of a horrible, bigoted government-past that has been sanitized by the good deeds of more recent history, this case serves as an appalling reminder of the evils that result when large numbers of the politically powerless are placed at the mercy of institutions engendered and controlled by a politically powerful few," the judge wrote.

Not surprisingly, the department wants Lamberth removed from the case and a different judge assigned.

Down the rabbit hole, tractor trailers disappear into an obscure grassy knoll just off the Prairie Star Parkway. The cave, in an industrial park a half hour southwest of Kansas City, offers few indications it houses a semi-secretive government facility.

After several minutes of driving through the dark, a faint dankness and dust fill the nostrils. Pocked walls climb into shadow. Painters have brightened them, like gardeners painting red roses white.

In dimly lit parking spaces, trucks disgorge box after box of documents to be catalogued, computerized and stashed away.

Two years and $120 million into the accounting, the archive has amassed 140,000 boxes with 300 million pages of old leases, bills, ledgers, account statements, school records, maps, letters and black-and-white photographs.

In a space the size of Kansas City's 79,451-seat Arrowhead Stadium, boxes extend close to the ceiling and down aisles so long they fade into the caverns — reminiscent of the fate met by Indiana Jones' recovered ark.

"People come in and ask, 'Where is the Lost Ark?'" said Jeffrey Zippin, deputy director of the Interior Department's Office of Historical Trust Accounting.

The shelves are coated with an electrostatically charged powder to resist corrosion or chemical action. The air in the painted cavern walls is kept at 60 degrees and 40 percent humidity. High-efficiency air filters catch 99 percent of all microscopic particles.

The facility is leased for $900,000 a month from Minneapolis-based Meritex Enterprises Inc. Its security and climate controls are matched only by the National Archives in Washington, D.C., and an annex in College Park, Md.

The cavern teems with a small army of federal contractors — five accounting firms and 15 other businesses — assisting about a dozen Interior and National Archives employees. Thirty students at Haskell Indian Nations University, in nearby Lawrence, use the documents for training.

It is closed to all but federal workers, contractors, Indian tribal representatives and researchers; privacy laws protect the names of living accountholders.

The boxes come from about 100 of the department's Bureau of Indian Affairs offices and from National Archives' record centers. At a nondescript warehouse nearby, 100 workers sort through the boxes and log their contents into computers.

The records are an eclectic mix: 1943 photographs of Navajo women cooking; a handwritten appeal from a Great Plains Indian for compensation because some of his cattle died; and a 16-page list of Sioux Indians killed and wounded — Black Moon, Sore Eyes Woman and Afraid of Left Hand, among them — on Dec. 29, 1890 at Wounded Knee, S.D.

Some boxes are tattered, faded or water-damaged. A few were decontaminated because of animal droppings.

Concerns about the how the trust accounts are managed are almost as old as the trust itself.

In 1915, the Joint Commission of Congress on Indian Funds warned of "fraud, corruption and institutional incompetence almost beyond the possibility of comprehension." In 1928, the Interior Department found Indian trust data unreliable and almost useless. Dozens of other scathing reports followed.

Finally, in 1994, Congress demanded that the department fulfill an obligation to account for money received and disbursed. A year later when account statements still had not been reconciled, Elouise Cobell of the Blackfeet Indian tribe in Montana joined with the Boulder, Colo.-based Native American Rights Fund and others in suing.

A worker enters the American Indian Records Repository in Lenexa, Kan., Friday, Feb. 24, 2006. "Fractionalization" of accounts is a major obstacle in managing the trust. As ownership of the 160-acre and smaller land parcels transferred from generation to generation, proceeds from the trust accounts had to be divided among more and more descendants. Department officials say 90 percent of the transactions are for less than $100.

"In every category it has cost us more to find the errors than the total amount of the errors we found," said departing Interior Secretary Gale Norton. "When you consider that we have millions of transactions under $1, you're spending $3,500 to find out if we handled $1 correctly."

Norton's plan for the accounting includes checking half the 57 million transactions and one-quarter of the $5 billion at stake between 1985 and 2000.

"We don't have every single record of every single transaction that has occurred since the 1800s. We certainly do have enough records to do a complete accounting," she said.

Accountants are examining nearly all financial transactions over $100,000 in the 1985-2000 window. That represents $276 million — or about 5 percent of the money at stake from those years. Also being checked is nearly every payment an Indian tribe made to its members or resulted from a suit or settlements. They total $784 million — or about 16 percent of the transactions.

An additional 4 percent of the money — 19 million transactions, most for less than $1 — is considered interest. That represents about $177 million. All those transactions are checked, too.

For the other half of the transactions — three-quarters of the $5 billion at stake — the department uses statistical sampling to the check the accuracy. It's a method the Indians and Lamberth rejected, but a federal appeals court approved for use as a tool. The courts must sign off on any final accounting.

After 10 years of battling in court, no one knows how much was collected or paid out to the Indians.

"The previous administration as well as ourselves tried in good faith to tackle this problem. It was a much larger undertaking than anyone imagined," Norton said. Early in her tenure, Norton half-joked about how she divided her time. "Indian trust, Indian trust and Indian trust," she told The Associated Press.

Geoffrey Rempel, an accountant working for the Indian plaintiffs, said the evidence is undisputed that trust records were destroyed over the past century, so there is no way officials can claim to have enough of them for a proper accounting.

"All they're doing is matching bad documents to bad documents, showing you what they want you to see," he said. "People would be thrown in jail if they audited banks like this. This is completely unacceptable — unless it's for the Indians."

Most people agree the only acceptable solution will come from Congress.

Senate Indian Affairs Committee Chairman John McCain, R-Ariz., and House Resources Committee Chairman Richard Pombo, R-Calif., oversaw a recent hearing to find the quickest and fairest way to end the dispute.

Experts urged them to study the legal arguments — then arbitrarily pick a settlement figure.

Stuart Eizenstat, a former deputy Treasury secretary in the Clinton administration, believes Congress should create a settlement commission to process claims, similar to the reparations made after World War II.

"It would be a disaster to go back to court. It would just resign the Indians to another decade of fruitless litigation," he told the AP. "This cries out for an administrative, rough justice solution."

Eizenstat negotiated the historic agreement with Switzerland's two largest banks to pay Holocaust survivors $1.25 billion. He said Congress should pick a figure that errs on the side of overpaying to handle both accounting claims and anticipated claims from Indians challenging how the government actually managed the lands.

"You presume that if the records weren't there, it's because of mismanagement," he said. "If they themselves as trustees mishandled records, then they have to handle the burden."

Even Swimmer, who wants Congress to give the department some "clear direction on its responsibilities," agrees with the concept of a big, somewhat arbitrary payout.

"Just pick a number," he told the AP. "It's reparations, not repayment."

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Good Afternoon, you might remember me we talked a few times. I just have a few questions, the first question is my marriage in trouble? How long will this last? What do you see in my future? Is it gonna get better? I am worried about my son will he get out of the situation that he is in?

I am having a hard time dealing with a lot of things in my life and I just needed some guidance from someone and I thought of you. Please give me something to look forward to. Does my life get any better?

Worried and confused in Kyle

Dear Worried and Confused:

Yes, bless your heart, things are getting better. Right now on the earth we have entered into a new "vibration" or a merging of realities that is creating a time of immediate manifestation. Simply put: we are now in a time when things manifest in our lives very quickly. That includes the good, the bad and the ugly.

Whatever our strongest belief is will determine what we "draw" towards us. Problems that have been issues before will advance rapidly into our lives until we finally lay them down - or just plain let them go. Your marriage is not in trouble - per se.It has its moments of vast frustration as the two of you don't always speak the same language and your husband is preoccupied and crabby relating to his work. He feels that nobody is listening to him, his constructive approaches and his understandings. He carries that home with him where he also has decided that nobody really cares about what he thinks - just what they think.

You are reflecting similar behavior right back at him. Neither of you feels listened to or considered. This lays the ground work for battle. Let him be crabby for awhile, give an even effort to listening to what he isn't saying, and don't take his unhappiness so personally. Your marriage will survive and be okay - unless you get so angry (watch hormones) that you decide that he has a personal mission to destroy you and make your life miserable (which he doesn't). He loves you, he's just out of "sorts"...and unfortunately nobody knows which store sells those to people who are out.

Your son - well yes, he will eventually be out of his mess. It will take a while, and he has to "face the music." So, he has kind of a hard time in front of him, but in the long run it may have a positive impact upon him. He too is manifesting just exactly what he has the most faith in: distrust, dishonor and sour motives. Currently he doesn't even trust you. Let him be, pray for him, he will be fine and when everything is said and done, he really is a good man and will live a good life.

Look forward to a trip with two family members. The three of you (and maybe one or two children) will be heading southwest for a journey of fun and sun. Visit the Anasazi, visit the high plains and take a walk in Canyon DeChey. I also see a phone call that brings you between $350 and $500 dollars.

Good phone call. I also see some time with horses, new shoes, a new recliner and a repair on the front of your house. Life will get easier.

Dear Anna,

I am just wondering if my cousin likes my boyfriend and if he likes her? I'm really concerned because of the way she flirts and flaunts herself when we are around.

Maybe I'm a little jealous but I know that she was with my sister's man intimately but my sister doesn't know. Should I trust my man and does he love me enough not to do the same thing? I thank you for all your help.

Troubled in Love

Dear Troubled in Love:

You are nobody's fool - and your boyfriend does love you but he is not made of concrete. It takes a strong willed and disciplined man not to follow a woman who throws herself at him. Your boyfriend does not want to hurt you or ruin your relationship but he is young and might I add, stupid enough to believe that he can maybe get away with it. He is not planning to "go after" her in anyway, but she has her eyes on him.

For her, it is a low self-esteem driven issue. She doesn't really "want" your man as a life mate, she just wants to know that she has just as much power as you seem to have over him, she wants to seduce him, and then have that "secret" with him. It is about power over you. You can warn your boyfriend - and sometimes that works, but generally it doesn't. Don't encourage too much time with your cousin - instead introduce her to somebody who is very hard to get and very good looking.

It might turn her head for awhile, but she is very wiley, and off balance emotionally. Love and conquest are not the same thing, and just because a woman can get a man to bed doesn't mean he even likes her. If your cousin were writing me I would advise her to seek counseling, for she is headed down a path that will label her the "destroyer" and she won't have a friend in the world, for no one will trust her.

You should trust your man right now because he loves you, but also pray for him. He doesn't want to bring any harm to you or your relationship, he has decided that he really does love you. But, here comes the but, he is a man, and he is young, and a naked woman is a hard choice, and the wrong choice. Tell your cousin you don't care what she tells you, you know what she's doing and you don't like it.

You can tell her she can have any man she wants, but yours is off limits, and that if she takes a real honest look at her behavior she'll have to call it what it is: flirting in a dangerous way. Women that behave differently around women than they do men are flirting. Simple, direct and truthful. Let her bare the burden for her own work. Blessings to you.

Dear Anna,

I had a question concerning my girlfriend. She seems to be overly possessive and I'm not going to lie, I can be that way too, but it just doesn't seem like we'll be together in the long run.

We seem to fight a lot and I think it will be our end if this keeps happening. Another thing, I don't want it to end badly, is there someone for her, who she would be better with, also, is there someone for me? Lately I've been having difficulty getting my priorities straight, with college and everything, do you see anything bright in my future?

Concerned for girlfriend

Dear Concerned:

I'm gonna write a song, and it's gonna go like this:

If there's trouble in her (his) eyes
The heart becomes insane
Jealousy is not your love
It shows no fairness only pain.

Jeasousy becomes your reason
The kin unto your soul's desire
It springs from darkness evil traitor
And fuels only destructive fire

Jealousy is a pattern of thinking similiar to addiction. A little insecurity goes a long way in this world, and it is a destoyer. It is a reflection of the inability to control another in every waking moment, and the lack of trust that if someone is not under your control they are not trustworthy. I would never want to marry someone that I could not trust with my life.

You are correct, you will break up. It may be okay for you but you can't fix her, and she believes in suffering, and that every relationship that doesn't work out is in fact a tragedy. The truth is very much simpler: things don't work out because they are not supposed to.

Your future is bright. I see law or the legal side of things. I see rules, regulations and working within that realm. You are a good person, strong morally and vibrant spiritually.

Your life will be good. You are pretty young to have all of your life figured out right now, so be a little more patient with yourself and stretch your imagination some. If you knew exactly what you were going to be for the rest of your life right now, what would you do with the rest of your life? We learn as we go and grow.

Dear Anna,

I read your articles every Friday and I see how you help people. Well let me tell you a little something about what's going on with me; I've been seeing this guy for a couple months now and neither of our families like each other and they don't want us together . My family's been telling me things that this guy I'm seeing is saying bad things about me and seeing someone else behind my back. Is it true?

He says he wants me to be with him and have his baby. He has a baby from someone else and he says they're just friends but they are together all the time and it makes me feel mad, I think they are back together and everyone tells me they are.

Could they be back together? I have feelings for him its just that people are telling me things back and I don't know what to do. Do you think it is going to work out between us? Should I just stay away and move on?

Confused
Dear Confused:

You got it honey, move on. Almost every young man on and off the rez seems to tell his girl-friend that he wants her to have his baby. It is an epidemic of stupidity. They really don't want to be fathers with all that entails: supporting the mother and the baby, being there, no partying, working to improve your life and the life and future of your child, taking care of a baby by changing diapers, feeding, walking, taking to the doctor...responsibility, responsibility, responsibility. What they do want, it seems, is to leave their permanent mark. Hickies, a temporary mark, at least go away after a few days - but a baby doesn't.

The proper order is: friends, lovers, time time time time time, marriage, baby. It used to be marriage and then lovers but I am more realisitc than that. He is back with his ex, now and then anyway. She has his baby and believe me it hasn't improved her life any except for the love of the child.

Children are sacred, and they are forever, and they shouldn't be bartering material in a territorial war. They also should not be used as pawns to hold onto or create a relationship. Children should not be byproducts of a territorial claim, they do not prove that you love somebody, and anyone that ever asks you to "prove" your love isn't worth your love. Having a baby is something that a couple should do together, not the woman alone begging her lover to show up now and then. Don't get me started.

You will find another boyfriend. Do yourself a favor, and don't go out with men that would not be a good husband, or quit looking at every man as though he might be your future husband. Relax, have fun and don't commit for awhile. The real love is coming, but it takes about three years.

Blessings to you.

In memory of Rebecca Cottier-Apple

Happy Memorial
Mothers Day

I thought of you so much this past week during the Mother's Day festivities, your strength and your love.

I admired your strength so much in how you were such a wonderful mother.

You were a good mother and taught your daughters how to be strong and in turn I tried to teach my daughters that too.

Now my sons need me and I need to teach my sons that strength you gave us, when I think of you, I know I can do it because I have you in me.

You will always be in my heart.

Your daughter, Amanda Rose

REMOVAL AND PREVENTION OF BLACK MOLD

EFFECTS OF BLACK MOLD:

Here is the answer to keeping "Black Mold" under control, because Black Mold has been around a long time. If left untreated, dampness in a home or basement can rot wood, peel paint and promote rust and mildew.

FIND THE SOURCE:

Here is a simple test to determine if dampness is caused by seepage or excessive humidity in the home. Cut several 12-inch squares of aluminum foil, tape them in various spots on the floor and walls and seal the edges lightly. If moisture collects between the foil and the surface even after several days, waterproof the interior walls.

PREVENTING FURTHER DAMAGE:

If moisture forms on the surface of the foil, take the following steps to further prevent damage to structure. To alleviate excessive humidity, close windows on humid days. If structure is poorly ventilated, install an exhaust fan. Vent clothes dryer to outside to emit moisture. Another alternative is using a dehumidifier, especially during summer months when humidity is high. Treat wall with epoxy-based water proofing paint or masonry sealer (Properly clean walls with mildew cleaner before application.)

MAKE YOUR OWN TREATMENT:

You can make your own mildew treatment by mixing 1 quart of chlorine bleach, 1 tablespoon of laundry detergent with 3 quarts of warm water. Scrub the Black Mold stained surface with the solution and allow it to work until the discoloration vanishes, rinse thoroughly and allow surface to dry.

SAFETY MEASURES:

As a precautionary measure, put the solution in a spray bottle and label it accordingly for that specific purpose. Be sure to wear goggles, rubber gloves and protective clothing when using mold and mildew solution.

VENTILATION

Never allow solution to come in contact with carpet or fabrics and clean the shoes you wear before walking across carpet surface. Apply solution in a well-ventilated area and make sure that your exhaust fan works in your bathroom. When bathing or cooking, make sure ventilation fans are in place to prevent excessive moisture and keep interior environment dry at all times.

PREVENTTIVE MAINTENANCE:

Don't block fresh air vents in your house. Structures need fresh air to keep the air circulation in your house clean and dry. When weather is warm and dry, open any windows near trouble spots to allow dampness that may be in your house to dry.

SEASONAL CHANGES:

In the winter months keep the thermostat set on 70 degrees Fahrenheit, as dampness is related to higher temperatures. Make sure all water pipes in the basement and crawl spaces are properly insulated to prevent moisture build up. Another measure is to make sure double-paned windows are properly installed to prevent cold moist air from structures.

REVIEW

By determining the source of moisture buildup and addressing areas of dampness, homeowners can Black Mold by taking a few simple precautionary steps. Identifying trouble spots and adjusting to seasonal changes can improve your living conditions and lessen the chance of mold and mildew buildup. The answer to keeping your home free of mold and mildew is to maintain a dry and well-ventilated environment to prevent to growth and spread of Black Mold.

New cafe near Kyle offers fine food and service

BY AMANDA TAKES WAR BONNETT
Times Editor

KYLE - There is a new eatery in town serving some delicious, fine food combined with good service.

The Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort Restaurant has been open for more than a month.

The restaurant is located within the motel and resort and offers customers a chance to enjoy their meal outside on the deck. The restaurant was built within the motel and is next to the trading post.

The restaurant is open every day from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. and serves soups, a fine chili, rib eye steak, hamburgers, chicken and appetizers; to name but a few of the items served from the delicious menu.

All burgers weigh in at ½ pound, said Shannon Puckett, restaurant manager.

The salad is fresh an crisp and generous.

Puckett manages the restaurant but hinted that her grandmother Vinnie Puckett is the top dog in the selection of menu items.

Aside from the fine food, the service at the restaurant is extraordinary with polite waitresses in professional looking uniforms.

The restaurant also offers take out and orders can be placed by calling 455-2555.

Another specialty is the coffee served… Dark Canyon Coffee. Dark Canyon Coffee is a robust tasting coffee, sold out of Rapid City. The coffee has exotic names such as

Young deaths create shock and concern

Four recent fatalities overwhelm families, community

BY TOM CRASH

MISSION - Four young men have passed away in the Mission area in the last three weeks; Coleman Marshall, 18, died from alcohol poisoning on April 30, the night of the Todd County high school prom; Stoney Larvie, 17, took his own life two and half hours before the Todd County high school graduation on May 12; Michael Glynn, 18, wrecked his car east of White River on May 14 hours after White River graduation ceremonies, and died from his injuries on May 17 and Casey Hunger, 17, took his own life on Sunday May 21.

"We are in shock, the whole community is in shock," said Denise One Star, team leader for Team South Dakota for the upcoming North American Indigenous Games, "why is this happening, why now and what do we do?"

Monday night a meeting was held at the tribal council chambers in Rosebud and another meeting was scheduled for Sinte Gleska University in Mission on Tuesday. Concerned participants included parents, students, community members, tribal officials,

Recent suicides at Rosebud prompt meeting

ROSEBUD - The recent deaths and suicide of seven Sicangu males spanning this last year, prompted RST council representative Marion Young-One Star to call a meeting at the tribal council chambers on May 22 at 6 p.m. The figure is unofficial and was cited by a tribal member in attendance at the meeting.

An announcement went out on KINI FM radio around the Rosebud calling for therapists, the youth, and concerned tribal members about the recent rash of suicides and death. One Sicangu youngster had committed suicide the night before and it was clear that many at the meeting were grieving. Rosebud Law Enforcement Services police officer, Mark Kattell, confirmed that 18-year old Casey Young had died.

In recent testimony to the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, William Martin of Juneau, AK said people never talk ill of the deceased at funerals and when young people observe that behavior they wonder if that is all it takes to gain respect from family and friends. He also said that the causes of Native American suicide are embedded in the community; and the tools for preventing suicide also reside with St. Thomas More used their first Lakota Nation title as a springboard for a state championship and an undefeated season.

Pine Ridge beat Little Wound in overtime 47-44 at LNI, beat the Mustangs 47-45 at the Rosebud Shootout and held off Little Wound 54-50 in Pine Ridge then lost 72-43 in the District 14A championship game. Little Wound went on to down Platte for the second time this year for the regional title and took seventh in the State A. Meeting coordinated to combat suicide the community.

A prayer was offered by Sherman Wright and a discussion about the purpose of the meeting ensued. The youth were invited to the meeting in case they had a difficult time coping with the recent suicide. Claudette Arcoren was present and spoke of the work she has done to protect and shelter her grandson who had a difficult time in school with other children.

Some forty people showed up and exchanged ideas, stories, and strategies for addressing the very pressing issue of suicide among the people. Many of those in attendance were police officers, nurses, lawyers, parents, grandparents, therapists and college instructors. Several students were also in attendance, but did not share in the dialogue.

A second day of the concerned tribal members was to be held at the SGU Human Services department at SGU at 3 p.m. on Tuesday, May 23. Young-One Star said that the Sicangu Elderly Concerns group would also be present to meet with any of the young people who attended.

Claude Two Elk and Darryl Marcus spoke to the group about what needs to be accomplished in order to prevent suicide. Marcus said, "We always speak of the youth. This is an awakening for the people. We need to ask the council for a grant to fund a task force." He also noted that the Rosebud Educational Society needs to do programming on suicide prevention over KINI. Two Elk said that there is no reason why a suicide prevention curriculum should not be implemented in the classroom.

Marion Young-One Star said, "Starting a task force needs to be in every community. There is no help from parents. Some things could be identified." Burdette Clifford of SGU further noted that, "We need to meet on a regular basis and talk about issues and bring more people. The issue of children has been neglected and gangs and suicide are the outcome of this. Kids have to survive so they take over the house."

Judge Janelle Sully from the RST courthouse was also present and noted, "We want this help to get the task force to help them. KINI should have elders go on air to help them." Sam High Crane of SFIS said, "Kids need talking to. Someone they can trust. I built a connection to them. Kids want to start something but there are always no funds. I wanted to set up an ROTC. We were working on a Lakota radio station. We were going to do talk shows and things in Lakota."

A sign-up sheet was passed around for those who wanted to help in some way. The next meeting will see the creation of a suicide task force, which will presumably assemble ideas and strategies much like were spoken of this evening.

Angel Wilson, Sicangu tribal member and Registered Nurse from the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital noted that, "At the I.H.S. we see suicide attempts every week. As a parent and an auntie, I'm here to help in any way I can."

Finally, Lloyd "Sonny" One Star arrived with his son and a friend toward the latter part of the meeting. He said, "The youth are getting impatient. They are a little 'nation.' Why not put out a survey to different schools and about different topics. You might find out that drugs are number one and suicide prevention, it can be prevented.., a lot of them do have these things on their mind. We can get to them. It is time to listen."

police officers and educators.

"In looking back, I can't remember a time that was like this," said Darrell Marcus, past tribal council representative, "we have seen a number of attempts with pills and so forth and now this, we need to reach out to our youth."

Marcus related his own struggle about going through surgery at the Indian Health Service Hospital, about how it was messed up and he has had to go back for four more surgeries.

"Here I am 47 and since that surgery in 95, I have thought about suicide more than once," admitted Marcus, "more than anything it was the support of my family and friends, they talked to me and I came out of it; all of us need a strong support system, especially our youth."

Across Indian Country, alcohol or drugs or both are involved in an increasing number of suicides among young people. The number seems to go up at transition times in a young person's life, graduations especially, proms, a death in the family, a separation or divorce in the family.

"The Pine family awards a small scholarship each year at graduation to keep the memory alive of my sister, Cassandra, who committed suicide during her freshman year in high school," said Alex Wilson-Pine, Friday, as he presented the scholarship at the Red Cloud high school graduation, "we miss her very much and we want to remind everyone of the importance of staying connected and the need to work together to support and listen to our youth."

"He played on my baseball team for two years, Casey and his sister Lacey," said Marcus about Casey Hunger, "he played shortstop and outfield and his sister pitched for us and he was a really friendly young man - you have to ask as a coach could I have done more, should I have kept in touch with him?"

Stoney Larvie was a junior at Todd County high school, he was an athlete playing football and basketball and baseball and really involved.

"That's what I still ask questions about all the time," said Dale Pine, "my daughter Cassandra was really involved, she was a jingle dress dancer, she ran cross country and played volleyball and played basketball and she had brothers and sisters and her mom and dad yet she chose to leave us, I'm still asking questions and still trying to help other parents learn from her actions."

"We are all just reeling from this, yet we need to stop and listen and hear our youth and we need to provide a better support system for all of them," added One Star, "all of our young people are so valuable, we need to work together and figure this out."

Native leader says culture aids suicides

Children need more overt affection from parents

WASHINGTON (AP) - Alaska Native villages tend to suffer waves of suicide, with one tragedy triggering other similar deaths. William Martin, chairman of the state Suicide Prevention Council, told a U.S. Senate committee he thinks he knows why.

"I believe there is a copycat effect that is encouraged by how we talk about people after they kill themselves," said Martin, a Native leader from Juneau.

At their funerals, no one speaks ill of the deceased, he said. "But there may be a person listening in the audience, a young person, who might think to themselves, is this all I need to do to gain respect from my family and my friends and my elders? And so it starts a compounding effect," he said.

Martin was one of several witnesses who told the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs on Wednesday that while the causes of Native American suicide are deeply embedded in the community, the tools for preventing suicide are in the community too.

Suicide rates are alarmingly high in some American Indian and Alaska Native communities. Alaska's statewide suicide rate is second only to Nevada's. And, as Martin told the committee, Alaska Natives commit suicide at two to three times the rate of non-Natives.

"As an Alaska Native leader, I've become convinced that my people must go back to the study and lessons of our ancestors, who lived in a time before alcohol was introduced to our communities," he said. "Suicide then was an unheard-of event, except in rare cases where one had grievously shamed his family or has caused despicable hurt (to) others." And yet, he said, some aspects of the culture aren't helping. Traditional Native parents, he said, aren't given to overt, daily demonstrations of love for their children, he said.

"To change this culture, to change our ways, we need to find funds from outside our impoverished communities to support suicide prevent programs that assist our leaders and elders in changing the attitudes of our people," he said.

Dale Walker, who works on Native American suicide issues as a program director at the Oregon Health and Science University, said the problem is entwined with family violence, alcohol and drug use, and cultural disconnection. Community approaches are most effective when they tackle these broader issues, he said. Nearly all suicides involve alcohol or drug use, he said, and methamphetamine use is a growing problem. Meth, he said, causes psychosis and the loss of ability to reason, increasing the likelihood of suicides.

He and other experts praised a few of Alaska's new approaches to suicide prevention. The behavioral health aide program, patterned after Alaska's village health aide system, is an effective way to establish mental health services in distant communities, witnesses said.

U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski, R-Alaska, said she was happy that Maniilaq, the Native health service provider in the Kotzebue region, got a $1.2 million grant for "an incredible program where literally the whole family is taken out (of their remote villages) to be treated, for substance and other issues."

She suggested that the government needs to be more flexible in its grant criteria. When she talks to rural youths about how to improve their lives, they say they're bored and need something to do. Creating a community meeting place might help, she said, but the grants are geared for providing services.

She also wondered about the middle and high school students who give disturbing answers on anonymous surveys asking them about risky behaviors. How are those results used, she asked. Do the schools where one in five students report that they've contemplated suicide receive any extra attention? . One of the government witnesses said he'd look into it.

"I think when we ask our kids how they're feeling, what they're thinking, we need to be in a position to then respond, and not respond eight (or) nine months after the fact in some generic way," Murkowski said.

up against St. Thomas More in the Region 8A championship. Pierre moved Lower Brule transfer, McCauley, into the starting point guard position and rode his steady play to the State AA championship game, an overtime loss to Sioux Falls O'Gorman.

Just as he did last year, TJ McCauley leads the 2005-06 Indian Country Boy's All Star team as he traded his Lower Brule Sioux uniform for a Pierre Governors jersey. McCauley joined a veteran team with an almost seamless transition helping the Governors to a 16-3 regular season record and a number one ranking in the polls. The 6'1" junior's steady hand helped Pierre through a difficult Class AA regular season and to second place in the state tourney losing in overtime to O'Gorman. TJ averaged close to 12 points a game with five rebounds, five assists and four steals.

Daelan High Wolf earned a return to the all star first team averaging 27.5 points a game with 10 rebounds, 4.5 assists and four steals. A six foot point guard, High Wolf led the Cheyenne Eagle Butte Braves in scoring and this year had to step up his rebounding, leading the Braves in that category as well. High Wolf proved unstoppable this year and plans to take his game to the next level attending either Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence, Kan. or Mount Marty College in Yankton.

Red Cloud's Johnny Crow led his team to a 16-6 record and the Region 8A championship game earning a first team all star nod after a second team choice last year. Crow played with a strong offensive versatility this year mixing an ability to drive the basket almost at will with a deadly three point shot. He averaged 20 points a game and six rebounds with four assists and three steals. Johnny is heading to McCook Community College in southern Nebraska for the next two years to play ball and get ready for a strong junior and senior year at a bigger school.

Brice Hornbeck, a 5'9" sophomore point guard was the strong steadying influence for the State tournament bound Mustangs this year and earns a first team selection to the all star team to go with his first team all state honor in 11A football as a wide receiver. When Hornbeck went down mid-season to tendonitis in his shoulder, Little Wound lost four straight games; when he returned the Mustangs won six straight on the way to the State A tourney. When Little Wound didn't need him to score, Hornbeck directed the team with assists and steals and was a leader on the defensive end. When the Mustangs needed a little extra scoring, Hornbeck was there driving to the hole or knocking down the jumper. He is just a sophomore.

Mr. Hustle, John Provost from Pine Ridge rounds out the first team and that just about sums it up. John provided the energy, he was the motor on the 2005-06 Thorpes as he did what was needed just about every game, scoring on a drive off the dribble or pulling up for a jumper, a three or getting a steal at the crucial point in a close game. John is a competitor and more than anything else hates to lose and gets totally frustrated when that happens. Provost is a gamer and as a junior will be back to lead the team next year.

Second team honors go to JJ Arcoren/St. Francis, Duran Eastman/Tiospa Zina, Dylan Wince/St. Thomas More, Ryan Pourier/Pine Ridge and Darrel Tuttle/Rapid City Central. JJ is only a junior, the rest are seniors.

Third team selections included Michael Apple and Devon LeBeau/Little Wound, Christian McGhee/Red Cloud, Kris Leroy/St. Francis and Gunner Krogman/Todd County.

Honorable mention qualities go to Rich Big Boy/Little Wound, Lester Gotheridge and David Giago/Red Cloud, Isaiah Kirlie/Crow Creek, Michael Jack and Brandon Brown/Pine Ridge, Travis Spotted Horse and Travis Spotted war Bonnett/St. Francis, Kyal and Kansas Middletent/Lower Brule, Eric Archambault/McLaughlin, Colton Douville/Chamberlain, Tali Fast Wolf/Tiospaye Topa, Lenny White/Tiospa Zina and Jordan Big Crow/Oelrichs.

Busch and In the Woods dominate girl's team

MARTIN - Custer won their first ever girl's Lakota Nation Invitational, Bennett County zipped by Todd County for Region 7A's ticket to State after upending Little Wound in the District 14A finals, while Eagle Butte's late season surge ended in the District 12A finals against Mobridge.

Pine Ridge started one senior, one junior, one sophomore and two freshman and used an eighth grader as the sixth man and despite losing to Little Wound four times and finishing 12-10 on the season are looking ahead to a bright future.

Todd County's senior all around, Sunni Busch, returns to head up the first team.

The 5'9" guard plays every position on the floor leading her team to an 18-5 record while averaging 20.7 points a game. Sunni had an ability to light up a game both on offense and defense and provided solid leadership on the floor. Busch has signed to play at Chadron State College this fall, we will miss her confident style of play.

Little Wound's outstanding senior, Sadie In The Woods, moved up this year to the first team with an outstanding season, leading her team in scoring and rebounding. Sadie worked very hard this year, did everything I asked of her and more and provided great leadership both on and off the floor, commented her coach, Mary Tobacco. Sadie had an ability to slice to the basket to score or grab a rebound and when needed she could bomb threes with the best of them.

In The Woods earned a Gates Scholarship award, valedictorian honors at Little wound and was accepted to Duke University in North Carolina. She will try to make to the women's basketball team. The Duke Lady Blue Devils played in the NCAA championship game losing to Maryland.

Brittany Azure, a 5'11" junior at Cheyenne Eagle Butte, also moved up to the first team this year after being a second team selection last year as a sophomore. Brittany anchored the team in scoring and rebounding this year for Arlyn Wohlleber's Lady Braves. Azure's steady play provided quiet leadership for the team on both ends of the floor.

Lacy Weston, a 5'10" freshman from Pine Ridge, made a big splash last year joining the Lady Thorpes as an eighth grader following her Big Foot Conference season; this year it turned into a steady flow as Lacy played the middle against older and more experienced girls all year. She not only held her own but excelled in the paint and low post. Lacy is only going to get better in the coming years. Now she is holding her own and anchoring a very young Lady Thorpe team and improving both scoring and rebounding in each and every game.

Sammie Parvin, a 5'11" guard at Winner rounds out the first team. Sammie became a dominant force for the Lady Warriors this year playing aggressively on both offense and defense, scoring when needed but most of all applying constant pressure to the opposing team's undersized guards all year long. Her tenacity gave her the ability to dominate a game and become a force.

Her lanky 5'11" frame helped her on defense and especially banging the boards from her guard position.

Those earning second team honors included TyAnn Pourier/Little Wound, Char Wilson/Todd County, Kali Jenkins/Todd County, Keely Krolikowski/Bennett County, and Ashley Ross/Crow Creek. Kali and Keely are sophomores and Ashley in a junior.

Third team honors go to Keisha Brewer and Christian Janis/Pine Ridge, Kari Two Lance/Todd County, Nichelle Red Owl/Little Wound and Kristin Weston/Red Cloud. Christian is an eighth grader while Keisha and Nichelle are sophomores.

Honorable mention goes to Tia McCloskey and Summer Folkers/Todd County, Marisa O'Bryan and Ida Clarke/Red Cloud, Carissa Brown Otter and Germaine Morrison/McLaughlin, Shavonne Steppe/Crow Creek, Mikayla Mitzel/Little Wound, Jordyn Brown/Cheyenne Eagle Butte and Robin Webber/Pine Ridge.

The choices were difficult; many thanks to the coaches and media representatives who helped put the all star teams together.

Appeals court rules against White Plume's hemp growing

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - An American Indian treaty and United States law do not allow for the cultivation of industrial hemp on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, a federal appeals court ruled Wednesday.

Alex White Plume, vice president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, and members of his family planted hemp on their property but it was cut down and confiscated by federal agents.

Industrial hemp is related to marijuana and is used to make rope and other products. It has only a trace of the drug in marijuana, but it is illegal to grow hemp in the United States.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said it empathized with the White Plumes but concluded their enterprise was illegal.

``We are not unmindful of the challenges faced by members of the Tribe to engage in sustainable farming on federal trust lands ... And we do not doubt that there are a countless number of beneficial products which utilize hemp in some fashion. Nor do we ignore the burdens imposed by a DEA (Drug Enforcement Agency) registration necessary to grow hemp legally,'' justices wrote.

``But these are policy arguments better suited for the congressional hearing room than the courtroom.''

During oral arguments in December in St. Louis, the White Plumes' lawyer asked the appeals court to return the matter to a lower court to consider the legality of their crop.

The family tried three times to grow industrial hemp on Pine Ridge reservation land from 2000 to 2002, only to have the federal government seize and destroy the plants.

A judge ordered the White Plumes to stop the plantings but they were never charged in criminal court.

The family could have applied to the DEA for permission to grow the crop, but without that authorization the crop could not be allowed, argued Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Salter.

``The court should be commended for fulfilling its constitutional role by interpreting an ambiguous law of Congress,'' he said Wednesday.

The White Plumes' lawyer, Bruce Ellison of Rapid City, argued the family was not growing a drug so it didn't need to apply to the federal government for permission.

Ellison said he knew of no instance when the DEA granted a commercial hemp farming permit. And he said by treaty and tribal law, the White Plumes had the right to grow hemp without a DEA permit.

The appeals court disagreed, saying the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1868 set a number of provisions to encourage Indian farming but does not address hemp farming.

Ellison said the ruling is unfortunate because of the great economic potential of industrial hemp farming. He said he'll likely ask for a rehearing in front of the three-judge panel or a hearing in front of the full 8th Circuit.

``We will explore all legal options because of the importance of this issue to the White Plumes and all farmers across the country for whom industrial hemp could be a viable cash crop,'' Ellison said Thursday.

Yellow Eagle hired as assistant manager at Rosebud Casino

ROSEBUD - RST sergeant-at-arms, Glen Yellow Eagle, of Antelope Community was hired as the new assistant manager at the Rosebud Casino located at the South Dakota and Nebraska state line. Yellow Eagle is very active in Antelope Community and the RST Chairman's Association. He will assume his new duties on June 1.

Yellow Eagle was out of town at the Great Plains Indian Gaming conference and was unavailable for comment about his new position. Yellow Eagle has also been on the RST gaming commission for many years and will apparently bring the skills and insights he has gained through that experience to his new role.

During recent tribal council discussions it has been apparent that decreasing revenues over the last year have been impacted by rising gas prices, competition from other casinos and personnel issues that often come to the council floor.

Presently, the acting general manager of the casino is Trent Poignee.

Report critizes South Dakota voting rights

WASHINGTON (AP) - A report released by a civil rights group Wednesday criticized South Dakota's record on voting rights, saying jurisdictions in the state have shown ``persistent resistance'' to equal voting rights for American Indians.

According to the analysis, commissioned by Leadership Conference on Civil Rights Education Fund, 17 of the 66 lawsuits filed on Indian voting rights in the last 40 years were in South Dakota.

The report describes a hostile climate of voter intimidation, investigations of newly registered voters, discriminatory redistricting and a low number of reservation-based polling stations in the state.

``The combination of South Dakota's history of discrimination against Indians in voting, shifting demographics, and an environment of racial hostility make the state of South Dakota a prime candidate for future challenges under the Voting Rights Act,'' the report concludes.

The report was authored by Janine Pease, Director of Native American Studies at Rocky Mountain College in Montana, and includes an article by Laughlin McDonald, Director of the ACLU Voting Rights Project. It was one of 14 state reports commissioned by the fund.

South Dakota Secretary of State Chris Nelson took issue with the report, saying much of it was based on anecdotal evidence. He said it ignores positive trends in the state, such as a large boost in Indian turnout during the 2004 election and an easier process for voter registration.

``It is frustrating that we heard some of these anecdotal stories but we didn't hear any of the facts about what is really going on in South Dakota elections,'' he said.

Several provisions of the Voting Rights Act will expire if not renewed by Congress before next year. The law was originally crafted four decades ago to end racist practices such as poll taxes and literacy tests in Southern states by imposing tighter guidelines.

House Judiciary Committee Chairman James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., the measure's sponsor in the House, said he wants to put a bill on President Bush's desk by the end of July.

Former South Dakota Sen. Tom Daschle, a Democrat, participated in a conference call on the report Wednesday.

``Unfortunately while the percentage of Native American voters is increasing, it's still below the national average,'' Daschle said. ``We have come a long way when it comes to the right to vote, but we have a long, long way to go.''

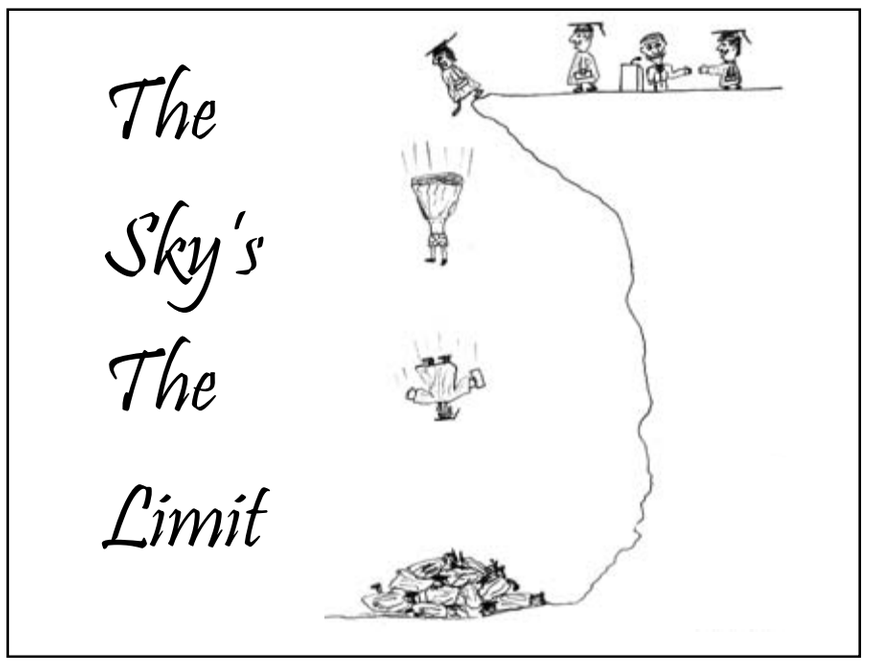
The solution is in our tiwahe

People everywhere appear to be taking a stand against the ravages of methamphetamine use and abuse.



It occurs to us that the solution to meth abuse is looking inward,inside of the structure of our "tiwahe" where such abuse has taken seed. Traditionally, the "tiwahe" was led by one or two figures who came forward as unofficial spokespersons for the home. Home is where the heart is and it's where our children should feel the safest, protected and sheltered from the onslaught of the outside world with its negative influences.

Meth use is but one of the contemporary scourges of a society that is getting more complex as the economy is reeling and global warming and rising gases prices are adding to the mix that is frustration and disenchantment with a way of life that is inceasingly more gloomy for some.

In Montana, some are designing anti-drug messages that are putting an ugly face on drug abuse. They are using real pictures of people afflicted by meth use. The Billings Gazette is saying that the legislature is restricting the purchase of large quantities of ephedrine from stores in Montana, as it is a major ingredient. The state is seeing an effective media campaign as a recent survey revealed that 70 percent of Montana teens are seeing or hearing an anti-meth advertisement three times a week.

In Lakota society, we can support our legislators as they also enact legislation which targets meth use. We can work to create a safe "tiwahe" and let our children know that drug abuse is a dead end.

Harmony begins in the home and our children are very impressionable and they are crying out for structure, love, and family unity. It is high time for us to take our stand as the solutions for combatting meth abuse begin in our "tiwahe."

On wasting away

BY NATASHA D. BORDEAUX

I remember my poor brother sitting at the table for hours after we all had cleaned our plates and left the table. He hated eating – I guess. I mean he could never finish what was on his plate. It was such an ordeal at meal time.

My mom will argue today that he served himself and chose what he wanted to eat. But he must have always overestimated.

He was stubborn, but our mother was more so.

Eventually he managed to drop enough on the floor, hide it under his plate, or smear it under the table to be able to get up and leave the table. He had some good techniques. He could take a whole plate of peas and smash them up and spread them so thin across the plate that it looked almost like he ate the whole serving. My favorite was when he would carefully drop big bits of meatloaf into his Kool-aid so mom would think he actually ate them.

It seems his eyes were always bigger than his stomach.

My mother was adamant. Never waste. Always eat what you take. Be thankful for what you have.

I don't ever recall having a problem cleaning my plate. Maybe that's why my brother is still as skinny as he was as a kid and I, on the other hand, have (ahem) filled out quite well.

My mother always said, "When you grow up poor, you learn not to waste."

Our fridge was always filled with leftovers that could not be dumped. We couldn't even spill out sour milk because my mom could make buttermilk pancakes out of it.

I guess she grew up quite poor. Maybe she was always hungry as a child.

I, on the other hand, only went hungry when I was too lazy to open up a can or box of commodity surprise.

We were poor; a single mother raising seven kids plus a regular procession of strays. But I never went hungry. I suppose I have the USDA to thank for that.

"Clean your plate, there are starving children in Ethiopia that would love to have what you are wasting."

That's another one I heard as well.

But now we live in a different time. I have never met anyone that looked as though they didn't get enough to eat – with the exception of a few anorexic girls. Even the poorest of kids seem to have plenty to eat. In fact, studies show that the poorest of families in the U.S. often have a higher tendency to be overweight.

In my community there are several families that live from check to check, off EBT and commods. Most of those adults are on the rotund side, and their kids are often quite plump as well.

We live in a society of excess – where too much is better than too little. But that attitude is now becoming the death of us.

Have you ever seen an adult eat the food off their child's plate rather than scrape it into the trash? How many of us take home tubs and buckets of wateca home after a gathering or giveaway just to avoid throwing it away? And once we are home we feel obligated to eat as much of it as we can and to encourage the rest of the family to eat it before it goes bad?

While we live in a society of excess, we still operate in the feast or famine mentality.

It is that discrepancy that we must overcome if we want to recover our health and the health of our children.

We have to realize that eating food just to avoid "wasting it" isn't saving anyone from starvation. In fact, the excess weight caused by such overeating is actually doing more damage to a person's body than starvation would.

I tend to think that food that is converted to fat and just hangs out like a flat tire around your middle is a big "waste" (and a big waist).

Like most Lakota women I always cook for an army. I start out with the intention of cooking enough for myself and three kids, then I think, "what if my sister and her kids stop by", or "what if my dad and little brother and sisters stop by like they did last week?"

So in go a few more potatoes or a couple more scoops of rice and there you go -- a meal big enough to feed the whole tribe.

Then it comes time to eat and no one extra stops by. After encouraging my kids to try a little more, I am stuck with a whole batch of leftovers.

I still hear my mother's voice that won't let me throw out any leftovers. So there it goes, covered in aluminum foil and put in the fridge for later. Unfortunately, I am the only one in my house that eats leftovers.

I understand that it is a whole way of thinking, an attitude toward food that must change.

I know now that whether or not I finish my helping of tuna casserole, there is no way that it will help those starving children in Africa.

Instead, I try to set aside a few dollars to send to a charity that helps those in Africa. I try to give to people that are less fortunate in other ways.

I also have made a point to start serving myself and my children only what is recommended.

I still have a compelling desire to cook more than I need to. But I also am OK with throwing out what doesn't get eaten.

I am working on my attitude toward food. I hope that my positive attitude will help my children attain a positive attitude as well. And maybe, if we all adopt healthier attitudes toward food, our people might live longer, be happier and live a better quality of life.

The world beyond death's door

BY DOREEN YELLOW BIRD
Reprinted with permission from Grand Forks Herald

Tragic and untimely accidents, such as the head-on crash on Saturday that took the lives of three young people from Minnesota communities, can leave a wound in the heart that will reopen again and again. It's a chronic pain that never really goes away.

When I was a junior in high school many years ago, four young people from my class were in an accident not far from where I lived in Minot. Three were injured and one was killed.

It was the young man who was killed who became that wound that never healed. Before you think this refers to a romantic notion or crush, I'll correct that. It wasn't. Strangely, I didn't even know the boy well. I knew his sister and that he was a popular athlete. I also knew him enough to say "Hi," and I thought him to be a good person.

While I don't remember the names of some of my classmates that many years ago, and I don't remember the other students in the accident, I never forgot his name.

As I read about the weekend accident near Fosston, Minn., and remembered the other crash so many years ago, I wondered why the memory of that accident and the young man's name stayed with me after all this time.

For years, each time I passed that sharp curve in the road in Minot and saw the deep gouge in the telephone pole, I remembered the accident. Then, I'd wonder what had been going through his mind as his time drew upon him. He was only 15 or 16 years old, so he was at the doorway of his life.

After the accident, his sister graduated from high school and probably got married and moved away; I didn't keep track. For you see, it wasn't really the person that affected me so; it was my realization as a 15- or 16-year-old that I could die, too, like this young man.

It made me understand how tentative and fragile life can be.

Through my years, I've gone through those times when I think I can feel what must go through a person's mine when they're on the brink, just before they walk to the other side.

Death is the worst unknown we can grapple with. In my lifetime, I have seen it come - sometimes quietly, sometimes unjustly, sometimes too soon, but always with great power. There's no saying, "Just wait a minute" or "Give me five more minutes."

The recent deaths of my mother and aunt seemed different. My mother seemed to know it was her time. With her children around her and her life being in order, her illness and difficulty with her body made the transition seem easy for her.

My aunt, for her part, struggled and smiled and held us around her. When she finally left us, I could feel her around me as if she was just out of sight.

On the walk of the Red Road, the image of death is put there as something you must face. A spiritual leader I knew once told me he wasn't afraid to die, because he'd been to the other world and it was quiet pleasant. He predicted his death, and he recorded that prediction to be heard sometime later.

When that day came to listen to the recording, he was surprised. He had forgotten about the vision he had years ago.

When he played it for me, there was a look on his face - the past had came forward and was about to consume him ... and he knew it.

So, I'm sure and so sad that the sorrow of the young people - and the bereaved families, too, of course - will stay with them for a long time. Prom night, graduation and young love are supposed to be things that happen at the start of a life, not at an ending.

A dad's view from the sidelines

BY SEN. JOHN THUNE
Washington, D.C.

This month thousands of South Dakota high school seniors will don a cap and gown and walk across the stage in ceremonies all across our state, leaving behind a past they have known for a future yet unknown. I remember making that walk across Murdo's auditorium stage 27 years ago like it happened yesterday. My how time flies! This year I will be there again, this time looking on, as my little girl passes that same milestone in her life.

Like most parents, it's a bittersweet experience. I know that time eventually comes -- for me it just seems like it came too soon. I admit to not being ready to say goodbye to that little freckled, red-haired girl who has graced our lives these past many years.

Like many of you, I've sat at I don't know how many ballet recitals to get a two minute glimpse of her performance. Many people can probably relate to listening to hours and hours of practicing for piano lessons and recitals. I steadied her on her first successful bike ride without training wheels, and treaded water in the pool until she finally made her first dive. I watched her try playing basketball (mostly to satisfy me) and soccer before finding her real love -- track and cross country.

I've seen her limp across the finish line dead last at the state track meet due to a painful injury. When I stood hugging her after the race I asked her why she even ran that race if she was in so much pain. Through tears she said, "Dad, the only reason I ran is because I didn't want you to think I was a wimp."

I've seen her bounce back from that experience the following year to stand on the medal stand at the state meet. I've watched her highest hopes and expectations this year be dashed by not one, but two stress fractures, sidelining her for most of her senior season and turning even the shortest run into a

A 'tokala' society on the Rosebud

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I finally had the opportunity to meet Archie Little whom I have heard on KINI FM radio several years ago. He was an active participant at the Sicangu elder games this past weekend and meeting him was notable as he said when he purchases the Lakota Country Times, he goes directly to the column that I write each week. It was worthwhile to hear that as I don't receive enough feedback on some of the stuff that I write. There are times when I wonder if anyone is reading my rambling thoughts at all.

I was pleased to know that Little is fluent in Lakota as I listened to him and others offer stories endlessly on the sidelines of the elder's games. The fact that they spoke only in Lakota was a real treat for me to listen to. I almost felt a sadness knowing that such Lakota storytelling should be transmitted directly to the next generation who are in the 30's or so and I am guessing that it probably is not.

I chuckled as Sam High Crane told of one Lakota man who saw something in the distance so he picked up a telescope or pair of binoculars. As he adjusted the lens, he appeared to see something. He made another adjustment and saw that it was a deer, I believe. He made, yet, another adjustment and it appeared even larger. On the last adjustment, as he put down the binoculars the deer was directly in front of him and he captured it.

The story was rather humorous in Lakota and seems to emphasize the fact that some stories do not appear as funny when re-told in English because Lakota doesn't lend itself to direct translation. Something gets lost in the "ueska" part of the process. "Ueska" is the translation process and the English version is mostly an approximation of what Lakota transmits.

When I find myself seated directly in the middle of such Lakota storytelling, I almost regret not tape recording the event as there is something special about that dynamic that will be one day lost. "Lakota weki omajulasni eyas" since I am very familiar with the language, I feel like I have a responsibility to bridge the gap between those who speak Lakota and those who do not. That is a huge responsibility and one that I couldn't hope to fulfill, however, knowing the language in an informal and formal sense is a gift for anyone.

I finally get a sense of the frustration and responsibility that language teachers have when they are charged with the responsibility of passing on Lakota. It's something that probably should not be left to the schools, but it is not occurring enough at home and someone needs to do it. I know it is difficult to be on the learning end of Lakota as it is a tremendously complex language and at the same time very beautiful. For me, it is almost a haunting experience to hear such wonderful Lakota speakers casually joking and teasing about some event and not realizing that one day the whole gift of language may be diminished.

Archie Little said I needed to write about the ancient "tokala" societies that were present in many Lakota nations and I agreed. He was kind enough to sing me a tokala song and once again, I didn't have my tape recorder with me. He said that on the Pine Ridge reservation their tokala okolakiciye was quite active and strong. The "tokala okolakiciye" in traditional Lakota society often looked for men who possessed desirable qualities and whose role was to help those in times of need. Once asked, they were obligated never to turn their back on those making the request. Little said that Oglala elders, Wilmer Mesteth and 'Chub' Thunder Hawk, were very active on the Pine Ridge and would often address the society about their roles and obligations. The bottom line was that tokala society members did not put themselves above the others, but rather shared equally in their responsibilities.

Notes From Indian Country

Betting on an uncertain outcome

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

What is gambling in its purest sense? My old friend Webster has this to say about it: To play a game for money or property; to bet on an uncertain outcome; to stake something on a contingency; an act having the element of risk or something chancy.

All of these definitions came to mind when I visited my tribe's casino recently because nearly half of the people I saw doing "something chancy," were members of my own tribe. This brings to mind the question; is the Oglala Sioux Tribe earning 50 percent of its casino profits from its own people?

And if that is happening on the poorest Indian reservation in the United States, how many other tribally owned casinos are doing likewise? I recall visiting the casino on the Lac Courte Oreilles Reservation in Wisconsin where I spoke at the community college and once again was surprised to see so many Indian people seated at the gaming tables.

I suppose the number of Indians gambling in these reservation casinos is quite obvious because these are smaller casinos pretty far away from the metropolitan areas.

It would be a different story at a casino the size of the Foxwood Casino in Ledyard, Connecticut. A very wealthy tribe, the Mashentucket Peqot that is few in numbers, owns this casino. However, I am sure that many Pequot's are still placing stakes on games of chance.

It is no surprise to me that so many of the new, federally recognized tribes have jumped into building casinos. Petitions for federal recognition have doubled since the advent of Indian gaming. Rumors abound that some of the tribe's on the waiting list, and some that have already passed the bar, were supported financially by dubious business investors and speculators while researching their background in order to pass the federal investigation into their authenticity.

And even more sinister, there is also speculation that some influential members of the Bureau of Indian Affairs accepted cash bribes to rubber stamp the recognition of these new tribal entities.

Now that is where an investigation should begin and if conclusive evidence turns up that some BIA officials did support tribal recognition for monetary compensation, those individuals should be tried and prosecuted and those tribes that gained federal recognition illegally should have that federal status revoked.

I've said it many times in the past, but I will say it again; one of the criteria for federal recognition should be that a new tribe should be denied the opportunity to open a casino until 10 years from the date of recognition. A 10-year waiting period should be a standard part of the federal recognition process. Now how hard would it be to add this stipulation to the recognition process? It would certainly drive away many of the financiers and speculators looking to make a quick buck on the new tribe's casino operations.

And if a tribal group is honestly seeking federal recognition because of its historic connections as an Indian tribe with a recognized language, culture and traditions, its motives to reclaim this unique status should be pure and should far outweigh any prospects or desires of opening a casino. In other words, its actions should be honorable rather than based on greed.

It seems to me that the United States government, state governments, and Indian governments are seeking to raise revenues by playing to the worst instincts of human nature. Gambling is a game of chance. First of all one must place a bet in order to win. In order to place a bet one must first have the money to do so. Where does that money come from? From a paycheck, a social security check, or a welfare check?

There is no question that games of chance always favor the house. The odds of winning a large amount of money from gambling are slim and none. Therefore, the odds of not having enough money to pay the rent, or make that car payment or save enough money to send Jane or Johnny to college can be placed at slim or none.

I worked at Harrah's Casino in Reno, Nevada many years ago, years before there was ever a casino in Indian country. I started as a change boy in the slot department, became a section manager also in the slot department, and then moved on to dealing dice in the pit.

In training sessions we (the dealers) were told more than once that people come to gamble in the Reno casinos to lose money. If they bring $400 dollars to the game, they will stay there until that $400 is gone. We were also told that if people would come with the idea that they wanted to win $400 and then quit, more often than not, this would happen because most gamblers almost always win before they lose.

Needless to say, I saw a heck of a lot more losers than winners in my days in Reno.

What would happen to all of the revenues the government, the states and the tribes wanted to raise through gambling if one day every American simply said, "Starting today I will never gamble again."

I suppose there are too many people out there addicted to gambling for this to ever happen, but one should also keep in mind that addiction is also an illness. And as my friend Webster said, "Gambling is to bet on an uncertain outcome."

pain-filled experience.

Through the ups and the downs, she's always been my little girl. Through adversity, she has learned humility and her faith in God has made her stronger. There is no greater satisfaction as a parent than watching your child experience hardship and failure, yet emerge with the heart of a champion.

There is a finality in knowing that my first born is about to leave my care and supervision and head out on her own. I'm excited that she will be starting a whole new chapter in life, but sad that this chapter that has so enriched our lives is coming to a close. Forgive me for wanting to do it all over again, but I do. My greatest joy and fulfillment in life has been having a courtside seat at every one of my daughters' formative experiences.

To all my fellow parents who may share a similar emotion this year or have had this experience already, thanks for being there for your children. And if you have the good fortune, like I do, of having a few years left with your other children, make the most of every moment. I've been called a lot of things in life, good and bad, but the sweetest sound to my ears will always be the word "dad".

O'Bryan qualifies in 100, 200, 400, Wohlleber wins two events on way to the state track meet

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

CUSTER/WINNER - Red Cloud qualified one athlete for the state track meet during Thursday's Region 8A competition in Custer but she did not slip in unnoticed as Marissa O'Bryan stood out with her shock of red hair and piston like strides that helped the senior run a career best 26.3 to win the 200, a career best 1:00.6 to take second in the 400 and a so so 13.3 to eek out a win in the 100.

Cheyenne Eagle Butte's Jordan Wohlleber, an eighth grader won both the 1600 and the 3200 in Region 6A and has the best time in the state in the 3200, at 11:46 and the third best time at 5:30.10 in the 1600.

William White Buffalo, a sophomore at Jones County, won the 1600 and 3200 and took second in the 800 at the Region 7B and will be competing in all three events at the State B meet. Kiko Mendoza, a freshman at Takini has the best time in Class B for the 3200 at 10:00.40 and the second best time in the 1600 at 4:39.10 and that will make for an interesting competition with White Buffalo and Lower Brule's Eltwin Grassrope who won the 3200 and took second in the region in the 1600.

Pine Ridge's Alex Wilson-Pine, a junior, won the 1600, took second in the 3200 to Little Wound's Vern Marshall and anchored the Thorpes second place finish in the sprint medley. Michael Jack, Dave Michaud and Juan Ramos joined Wilson-Pine on the awards stand for the silver medals.

Julie Bernie, a sophomore, won the 3200 race at the 7A Region in Winner and anchored Todd County's 4x800 second place finish helping Lorna Her Many Horses, Lisa Two Charge and Brittany Larvie qualify for state. Gunner Krogman, Todd County sophomore also qualified in three events as well taking second in the long jump while anchoring both the 4x100 to a first place along with Jaden Allen, Charlie Moe and Jesus Duran and the 1600 medley to a first place finish over Pine Ridge with Allen, Moe and Albert Her Many Horses.

Marissa O'Bryan, center, set the stage for regionals with an early season win in the 100 meters in a meet in Custer, site of the Region 8A meet last Thursday. O'Bryan ended up winning the 100 and 200 and took second in the 400, qualifying for all three for this week's state track meet in Spearfish and Rapid City. Photo courtesy of Steve McEnroe and the Rapid City Journal.

Competitors who finish first or second in a regional qualifying meet or who make the state standard in an event qualify for the state meet. Other qualifiers from Indian Country include from Region 6A: Gene Morrison from Chamberlain who won both the 1600 and the 3200, Brian Taken Alive/McLaughlin second in the 1600, Abbi LaPlante/CEB took second in the 200, Nadia Watt/CEB, an 8th grader look second in the 400 and from Region 7A: Wendy Schmaltz/TC was second in the 200 and Lisa Two Charge was second in the 800 while in Region 2A Rain Anderson, a senior at Flandreau won the 3200 and took second to teammate Josh Hale in the 1600.

In the Class B regions, Takini won the 1600 sprint medley in 8B with James West, Loren West and Sam and Kiko Mendoza and Derrick Locke, a sophomore at Tiospa Zina, took second in discus in 1B with a toss of 122-04.

"O'Bryan has made steady progress all year long and has a shot at the 100 state championship and should be really competitive in the 200," said Matt Rama, in his first year as head track coach at Red Cloud, "she is a racer and running against the top runners should bring out the best in this student athlete who proved to be equally adept in the classroom earning the valedictorian honor at Red Cloud this year and a Gates Millennium Scholarship."

Tyrone White/CEB will return to state trying to improve on his results from last year. White won the 1600 and took 4th in the 800; Morrison from Chamberlain was 6th in both the 1600 and the 3200, Wilson-Pine took second in the 3200, White Buffalo was 8th in the 3200, Pine Ridge's sprint medley team was 8th and Jordan Wohlleber took 6th in the 3200 as a 7th grader.

House passes bill, making it easier for vets to be homeowners

WASHINGTON - This week, the House passed the Veterans Housing Opportunity and Benefits Act. The package bill includes a measure sponsored by Rep. Stephanie Herseth to help Native American veterans become homeowners.

The Native American Veterans Housing Loan Program provides direct home loans to eligible Native American Veterans who wish to purchase, construct, or improve a home on Native American trust land. The bill will allow more veterans living on trust lands to take advantage of this important benefit, which is scheduled to expire on December 31, 2008.

Since the inception of the pilot program in 1992, the VA has made more than 440 direct loans to Native American veterans - including 20 from South Dakota. The direct loans are generally limited to either the cost of the home or $80,000, depending on which is less.

Herseth said, "This is an important and successful program that been proven to help Native American veterans in South Dakota and across the country in becoming home owners.

Native Americans are proud and patriotic Americans who serve their country in high numbers, and once they return from their service they should have every opportunity to purchase and own a home."

For a veteran to be able to participate in this program, the veteran's tribe must have entered into a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with the VA. To date, the VA has entered into MOUs with a total of 70 Native American tribes and Native Groups throughout the country.

RST creates partnership to transport IHS patients quicker

Editor's NoteThe article below is in response to an article on this particular initiative in the May 17 edition of the Todd County Tribune, and is intended for clarification purposes

BY MICHAEL LAPOINTE
Rosebud Sioux Tribe
Chief of Staff

ROSEBUD - On April 26, Rosebud Sioux Tribe President Rodney Bordeaux announced a partnership titled Cetan Air Ambulance with PASS Net, a private air-transport company based in Plymouth, MN, at the 8th Annual Great Plains Regional-Tribal Economic Development Summit in Sioux Falls, SD. The partnership was approved by both the RST Health Board & RST Council.

President Bordeaux stated, "This is an important venture that will help to save the lives of our people who need quick access to trauma care centers in Rapid City, Sioux Falls, or anywhere else in the region. This will cut down on access to emergency trauma care from an average of four hours to one hour. This will save lives for those who need to be flown out immediately."

Trauma experts refer to the sixty minutes following a traumatic event or medical emergency as the Golden Hour. This is a critical time for patients who need trauma care and can determine the difference between life and death. Current air ambulance flights now originate from Rapid City & Sioux Falls and can average four hours before getting a patient to either a Rapid City or Sioux Falls hospital from Rosebud Hospital.

As the President and CEO of PASS Net, John Warnock has an extensive history of working in the aviation industry. Mr. Warnock has had prior aviation work with United Parcel Service's radio-pharmaceutical initiative; check transportation contract work for the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis covering the states of North Dakota and South Dakota; Mail Services delivery work for Wells Fargo Bank in the states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, and western Wisconsin.

Warnock served as CEO of Integrated Commercial Solutions (ICS) until September of 2005, where ICS provides an integrated (air and ground) same-day logistics with operations in twelve states and air hubs in Blaine, Minnesota; Indianapolis, Indiana; and Addison, Texas. ICS clients include Wells Fargo, USBancorp, JPMorgan/Chase/BankOne; the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis; UPS; the U.S. Postal System; Cardinal Pharmaceutical; among many others.

President Bordeaux went on to state, "By having an air ambulance already based at our airport in Mission patients here won't have to wait for the air ambulance to first arrive at the Mission airport. Having this service will mean that our people get the emergency care that they deserve."

In conclusion, President Bordeaux stated, "This RST, as well as the OST, air ambulance projects were the results of our direct work with PASS Net. We didn't get this project started through any other groups following our lead (such as the Inter-Tribal Economic Alliance. In fact, ITEA followed RST & OST's lead in this endeavor. Our State Representative Paul Valandra, and the tribal councils of both RST and OST deserve the full credit for starting this important initiative."

The Oglala Sioux Tribe (OST) also endorsed a partnership with PASS Net to provide air ambulance flights for the people of OST as well.

Elder games a healthy 20 year tradition

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - The temperature was a comfortable 75 degrees as the Sicangu elderly slowly arrived for the 20th annual Sicangu Elder Games held at the old St. Francis Indian School track. The previous two days had been a bit uncomfortable hitting temperatures in the high 80s and low 90s, however, the wind blew most of the day and it made for an almost perfect day.

Coordinator for the event, Chris Horvath, has been in charge of this yearly fun event since its inception and has had the steady and undying volunteer support of Meredith Kills In Water, Brenda Sitting Bear, and Wendell Big Crow.

Sicangu elder, Richard Standing Bear, of Norris and President of the Sicangu Elder Concerns, Inc. gave a welcome address along with Genevieve White Wing, Rosebud, and Sam High Crane representing St. Francis Indian School, while Roy Stone, Sr. offered a Lakota prayer. The 50 and 100 yard events started before too long and were concluded with a ¼ mile relay with men's and women's teams. In 2005 there were some 75 elders who took part in the games, according to Kills in Water.

Alice Four Horns of St. Francis was a prominent figure in the events as she could be seen stepping out rather briskly with her cane in the 50 and 100 yard walking events. The elders were seated on the west side of the old track behind a couple of tables. It was almost like they were presiding over the event, even though they were very active participants. It was a wonderful sight to see for the younger Sicangu youth, who just happened to be in the minority today.

"Unci" Alice also stood toward the end of the games and explained the significance of the Lakota "shinney" game that was about to be played. She explained in Lakota, "Wi Ehani hotinpi eyas lehan hecunpsni. Hehan wacekiyapi. Tapa wicokan askiyapi. Weweela wakpala nahan sapa oti eci skatapi. Duwe ohiye hantas ceja gluopi. Wakaliyapi nahan bapa ahipi. Lehan hecunpsni. Wangaha oblake."

Translated into English, Alice explained that when she was a young girl that she had witnessed the 'shinney' game and that the ball was considered sacred and a prayer was said before the game. St. Francis and Spring Creek communities played a game and when it was completed they would bring food in cans like coffee and dried meat. She concluded that such practices are not occurring today.

T-shirts, bottled water, sandwiches and other snacks were available for those in attendance. Horvath explained that the water and foods items were donated by macincela hehan le wanblake. Buches store of Mission, Lakota Water. Inc. of Rosebud,Mission Shopping Center,Frito-Lay, Coke and others and that the vendors had given very generously. Myrna Leader Charge of the RST tourism office also brought two large sheets of raisin pie that were baked sugar free just for the elders. She had baked them in memory of her mother and grandmother.

Leroy Hairy Shirt, a younger elder said that he did a lot of walking in preparation for the sun dance, and thus, it explained his finish at the front of the pack for his races.

Other events such as horse shoes, softball toss, and a three legged race were held. Even the children were able to take part in the races.

While the events were occurring in a rather relaxed and stress free setting, many of the elders could be heard telling stories in Lakota. Sam High Crane, Leroy Hairy Shirt, Archie Little and Sydney Points At Him told stories of shinney games, rodeos, hunting and even a joke or two almost non-stop. It was a scene that must have been reminiscent of the "old days" when Lakota men and women would probably have congregated separately and told such stories. Culturally speaking, such informal settings were likely also very important in transmitting culture and language as the language is rather informal and humorous.

On one occasion, an ambulance could heard screaming by in the background and Sydney said in Lakota, "Someone's heart must have stopped" and it was a reminder that there should have been an ambulance standing by the Elder Games, but one was noticeably absent. Despite that, fun was being held by these very respected Sicangu elders. The games were concluded with many expressions of, "See you next year."

Kyle man gets 10 years for stabbing death

SIOUX FALLS - A Kyle man who pleaded guilty in February to charges in a July 4 slaying on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation has been sentenced to 10 years in federal prison.

Wesley Rooks, 18, pleaded guilty to voluntary manslaughter in the stabbing death of Brian Two Crow, 31, also of Kyle.

The maximum penalty was 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Rooks was ordered to pay more than $4,500 in restitution.

Court documents indicated Rooks stabbed Two Crow with a butterfly knife during a fight in the Kyle housing area. An autopsy said Two Crow died of a stab wound to the heart.

Rooks originally was charged with second-degree murder.

One defendant pleads guilty in slaying of John Apple III

RUSHVILLE, Neb. (AP) - One of two defendants in the slaying of a South Dakota man whose body was found in a lake has pleaded guilty to manslaughter.

Leonard Rondeau, 21, of Manderson, S.D., faces up to 20 years in prison. He's set for sentencing next month in Sheridan County District Court.

Officials say Rondeau and Stanley Brown, 26, of Pine Ridge, S.D., killed John Apple III, 21, also of Manderson, on Aug. 4, 2005.

Brown's trial is scheduled for July 24.

Two anglers found Apple's body floating in the Nebraska side of Whiteclay Lake, which straddles the Nebraska-South Dakota border on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

Todd County Middle School holds staggered graduation exercises

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

MISSION - An estimated crowd of 200 people or so crowded into a not so fully packed house to celebrate the graduation of its eighth grade class at the TCMS gymnasium on Friday May 18. This year saw the continuation of staggered graduation ceremonies as had been initiated last year and entitled "2005-2006 Achievement Ceremonies" in order to discourage the possibility of any disturbance at the affair.

TCMS principal, Peggy Diekhoff, explained, "Starting last year, we began celebrating with the 8th grade students by their individual teams. Doing this created a safer environment because there were less people in the gym during the ceremony; it assisted in helping to prevent the issues of gangs and violence that happened in 2004."

During the 2 p.m. time slot, the Kruse Team, Heinert Team, Traversie Team, and the Stoecklin Team hosted the graduation of 49 eighth graders.

The TCMS middle school drum, "Igmu Watogala" sang a number of honor songs in observance of the event. The mentor for the group is teacher, Gilbert Stewart. Todd County school board member, Marlon Leneaugh, offered the invocation, while principal, Diekhoff, gave a brief welcome to the crowd of students, parents, and community members.

"Igmu Watogala" is scheduled to appear at the Prairie's Edge in Rapid City on June 6 for a fundraising event sponsored by the Native American Journalists Association. Foundation president Tim Giago will be hosting Senator Tom Daschle in a fund raising event that will see OST president Cecelia Fire Thunder speak, as well as performances by Jackie Bird and Igmu Watogala.

Diekhoff said, "Our students are extremely talented; they have unlimited potential and deserve to be recognized for their achievements. It is a stepping stone to their high school graduation. We are extremely proud of the accomplishments of our 8th graders; they are the high school graduating class of 2010."

An I-movie was presented for audience viewing and which was projected on the north wall. It apparently featured all of the eighth grade class who were graduating this day. Some were shots of students on a recent field trip and others were of students in various poses during the year, studying or simply hanging out. The crowd cheered when middle school teacher, Mrs. Stoecklin, was shown exiting a water slide. Later, she teased the students about the photograph.

Marlon Leneaugh once again spoke and delivered the commencement address, as he spoke of his younger years of having dropped out of high school during his junior year and having a good job in carpentry. He realized that the work was a bit strenuous and challenging and decided to attend college to pursue a college education. He spoke of his days at USD-Springfield and the tremendous impact of technology on learning and the influence it is having on students. His hope was that all of the graduating class of eighth graders would progress together and be at the 2010 high school commencement exercises intact.

Dr. Richard Bordeaux, Superintendent of the TCSD shared the stage along with TCMS principal Peggy Diekhoff, and members of the TCSD school board. TCMS teacher, Steve Heinert, presented his graduating class to those in attendance and gave thanks to parents and students for the privilege of working with them. He left a bit of an impression when he told the young people that if they ever found themselves in need of someone to talk to, to give him a call as his name was listed in the phonebook.

One graduating eighth grader, Charisse Tunstall, was cited as having perfect attendance over the course of three years. Her mother noted after the ceremony that she had taken ill a couple of times, but after she felt better, off to school she went in pursuit of that perfect attendance. Her mother insisted that one had to be encouraged as such in order to learn.

The achievement ceremony was a "bitter sweet" time for Jacinda "J.C" Hesse. A lot of her family were assembled to witness her graduation; however, her mother was absent. She had lost her mother due to a motorcycle pedestrian accident on August 7, 2003 at the Piedmont exit during the annual motorcycle rally in Sturgis. Despite that fact, J.C. was the focus of amateur photographers and one professional photographer. Her maternal grandmother, Dee Starboy, and also her paternal grandfather, Marshall Stands, were in attendance to witness her special day.

Goodlow and Ferguson, Gates scholars

Tanisha Goodlow and Christine Ferguson

KYLE - Tanisha Goodlow and Christine Ferguson, both seniors at Little Wound High School received Gates Millenium Scholarships and will be attending the University of North Dakota and studying in the medical field.

Ferguson, the daughter of Faith Pourier and Boyd Ferguson, said there is a strong need for more nurses on the reservation and that is what prompted her desire in the medical field. She said Dr. Sarah Jumping Eagle has been her role mode,l and her encouragement has came from her grandma Genvieve Richards. She credited Deanna Wagner, a high school science teacher, for helping her to enjoy science. "She made it fun to learn and taught me a lot about science."

Goodlow is the daughter of Rochelle Middletent and Craig Goodlow Sr. She has four siblings Tilisha, Craig Jr., Terri Lee and Logan. Goodlow attended middle and high school at Little Wound. Her favorite academic mentors were Stacey Phelps and Michelle Means and of course her mom and her friends have been her encouragement. "I want to come back to my community and help my people," she said.

Both will be graduating on May 25, and both said they appreciated the financial help they will be getting and are looking forward to attending the university. "It's scary but exciting," said Goodlow. They will participate in a summer program at the university that will help them with their transition.

Standing Soldier: 'If I can do it, anyone of you can do it'

KYLE - On May 17, the Little Wound Middle School held their continuation ceremony for their outgoing eighth grade class.

Amelia Blackbear, middle school principal for five years, awarded 57 eighth grade students a continuation certificate to go on to high school.

Scott Means, a middle school counselor, emceed the event and introduced two outstanding students Kristen Clifford, valedictorian, and Lacey Roy who was salutatorian, each gave a speech.

Special guest speaker was former Little Wound School student Tasha Standing Soldier. Standing Soldier graduated from South Dakota State University with her doctorate in pharmacy this spring. She plans to continue her career through the Air Force.

Standing Soldier told the students, she was like them, she sat in the chairs as they were now and was asked, 'what will you be in ten years?" and she made that choice to do what she did with her academic life.

She told the students she grew up as they had. She didn't grow up with alot of money and came from a single parent home. She set her goals in increments of what she planned to do to graduate. She attributed her success to her faith in her Lord. "You will have plenty of obstacles coming your way, set your goals. God will help you anytime we can't handle something," she told the students. She spoke of going to Brookings with her two year old son and attending the university, as being one of her biggest obstacles.

"If I can do it, anyone of you sitting here can do it," she said.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am a very smart outspoken girl and I love to sing, play basketball and play guitar, but I'm still very sad. I have eczema, severe asthma, and I just had surgery on my foot.

When I make a friend people always get in the way and I end up losing them as friends, they got to that point because of me. I want to play varsity basketball, but I'm scared that I might not make it because of my asthma.

I want to go to college, and play basketball, people say I am pretty, I think so to but, I am not happy and I want my dreams to come true please help me, I want to keep on singing but there is a little competition, that try to be better than me. I really want to do this. I have been singing since I could talk, please help me. I want to be a star, I want to sing, I have struggled through health problems, my family , my parents are separated, I go to church every Sunday, I have done nothing wrong to anyone,

Scared and Unhappy

Dear Scared and unhappy:

I know how you feel. It is so hard to be less than physically perfect during certain ages. It is also hard to have asthma. I know, because I have asthma. You can play basketball. I am going to introduce to you a way to help you expand your breathing ability. It is Yoga.

There are two Yogic breath control methods that can move you into asthma control. Asthma is triggered by a lot of things, and antagonized by emotional stress. With your parents separating and your skin being contrary, and friends not in your life you are a target of an asthma attack.

These breathing techniques reduce the amount of albuterol that I ingest by about 90 percent. The first step is to breath in deeply through your nose. Inhale a long hard breath, and while you are inhaling you are puffing your stomach out.

You want to fill up your lungs even more than you can think they can hold - forcing to even fill up your stomach area (the diaphragm) and as you breath in you say in silence to yourself SAT. It is pronounced like it was spelled "sought". Hold that breath and repeat four times, SAT - A - Nam (pronounced like Viet Nam) - A. Sat-A-Nam-A. It comes from the language of the Sik (pronounced shiek). I believe it may be Sanskrit. After saying Sat-A-Nam-A four times, release the breath slowly while squeezing all the air out of your stomach and pulling your stomach muscles towards your tail-bone. Sat Nam means calling on the Divine Truth, or in other terms the Truth of God. Do this Sat Nam breath work starting out with at least four times several times a day.

You want to do it for about three minutes at a time, but you may have to work up to that. When you start to feel the restricted muscle or tenseness that happens at the beginning of an asthma attack, stop yourself and breath Sat Nam four times. It will help you calm down your body and build lung strength. The next exercise is Breath of Fire. Sit on the floor cross legged - or as comfortably close to that as you can.

Place your hands on your knees, palms up, and touch your middle finger to your thumbs. Breath in four Sat Nam breaths, then begin to bring up the tempo, each breath faster and faster through your nose: inhale and exhale while moving your stomach with the intake out, and with the release in. The rhythm is very fast, while saying Sat Nam, Sat Nam, (Sat in, and Nam out).

Build up to doing this for three minutes. These techniques will help you build up endurance. will re-oxygenate your blood. You may also want to check with a doctor about AVATAR (I think that is the prescription name). Many people find that it is effective, but it is very expensive. Like all drugs it can have side effects (like Thrush), so I do not use it. When you feel an asthma attack, take your inhaler and have a couple of hits, do Sat Nam breathing, make a decision that the Asthma is going to go away and that you are fine. These things help.

As to your skin and eczema - first, avoid eggs and grapefruit and other high citrus fruits, keep your hands off from your face, and fourthly, always use a fresh wash cloth, and be careful of the soaps you use.

Take vitamin A, C, D and E. Try and find at the local health food store (in Rapid, Staple and Spice, the Bread Root, or Main Street Market) Super Blue Green Algae. Put a tablespoon in something, mix it up, and drink it (if it is flakes), or follow the instructions if it is in capsules. I know that there are laser treatments available too, but I don't know if they work or not.

On friends: I know this sounds like a bag of bull, but first, be one. People have their own lives, they are self-involved. They will think of themselves first, so don't be insulted when they do. Let go of everything as a personal insult. Read the book The Four Agreements by Don Miguel Ruiz. Believe that book, it will serve you all of your life.

Have some patience for yourself. Life does not end or only revolve around high school. As you become more comfortable with yourself, others will become more comfortable with you. I see two good girl-friends and one guy that is your friend. That seems pretty good to me, if you can have three people in your life that help you to have a better day then you are truly blessed. Love people first, love their strangeness, their differences, their humor, their hearts...and you know what, they will love you too.

Being pretty is an advantage. Thank God you are pretty and that He gave that gift to you. Bless your appearance, and work at being grateful. It will make you prettier. One of your other gifts, your voice, should also be Blessed by thanking the Creator. Sing at every opportunity. Sing for your friends weddings, at ceremonies, at school, and find some others that make music and begin to amuse yourself. That is how groups get together and make it, they begin.

I see you taking more music in college, and learning more about vocal skills and development. Singing is also a very good control mechanism for asthma. Sing from your diaphram.

You will be a success. You can play college basketball, but I think that you will decide to maybe follow your music and play basketball for fun and in local leagues. I see you deciding to "play" with music primarily, and sports, secondarily. You will meet many people that are famous. You will teach others and use your skills to help enhance your life and others lives. Take your journey a little bit more slowly. Take charge of what you want to create and begin every day to do something to make that dream closer to happening. You are truly blessed in this life, understand what you are, what you have, be thankful, know you are okay, and have a good life. It's easy to have a good life if you really understand that you are having one. Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

Recently my significant other got into some trouble and he is going to be released soon so what I want to know is are things going to change and will I finally get to expect a child?

Sincerely wondering

Dear Sincerely:

I do see a baby, probably a boy. Your significant other needs some adjustment time - time to go to school, find employment and stay sober. Please don't pressure him into giving up his life for a dream that you can wait for. Let him develop himself into someone other than an ex-con before you strap him into a cycle of poorness that he can't break. Please learn to take care of yourself financially first. You can have your dream, but if you don't relax your dream will be a nightmare of poverty, drugs and alcohol, and struggle.

Be kind and gentle with yourself, your time, and your expectations. Let your significant other sort his life out; first stand behind him (your waiting), then with him. He has some growing to do, and if you want him to be who you want him to be, then give him time to get there.

Dear Anna,

I read your articles every Friday and I see how you help people. Well let me tell you a little something about what's going on with me; me and this guy have been together for 4 years, we don't have kids together but he has two kids with another woman?

He tells me he loves me, he wants to be with me but the problem is he also has two kids with this other woman; he doesn't want to be with his kids' mom because she drinks and smokes too much and that he would rather be with me? My relatives tell me things that they see him and his kids mom together when I am working during the evenings.

My relatives don't want us together because of the way he is treating me by going back and forth between me and this other woman? When I question him about it, he denies it and says that it is not true. I've got three kids of my own and he accepts them as his own, he spends time with me and my kids before I leave for work.

But afterwards, is he with his kids mom more? He wants to get married but he wants to wait until August, should I trust my man and does he love me enough not to lie to me? I thank you for your help.

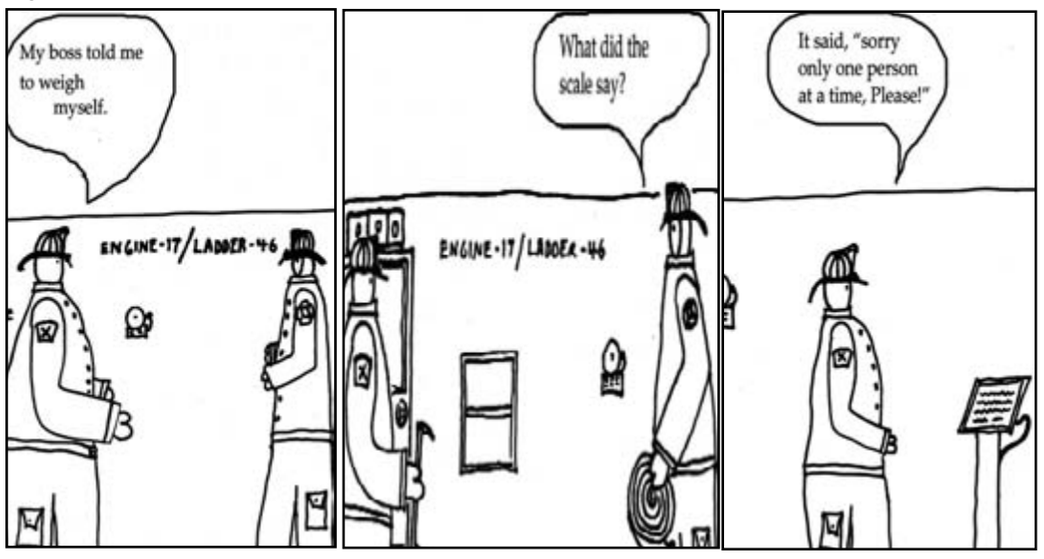
Troubled in Love

Dear Troubled in Love:

Well, I just have to ask you, is it okay in your mind for him to be with his kids and their mother? It is a personal decision. You are the one that it has to be okay with it in order for your relationship to work. He does spend a lot of time with his ex, and I would say he does still consider her his friend, and she probably has more feelings for him than you would be comfortable with. If you are going to marry a man, take the time to get to know his children and his ex. They will be in your life for a long time. You have to find neutral ground, where you don't feel threatened. I don't think it matters, in comparison, if he spends more time with his kids than yours. I certainly, as a mother and a human, would rather spend more time with my own children than with someone elses children - but then, that's just me, so I understand that. However, I don't ever want my husband to spend more time with his ex than with me. So a new solution has to be reached, otherwise it won't work.

You must resolve the jealousy issue. He has no reason to lie to you if he really wants to marry you, unless you trigger him into lying by being jealous. Is he being unfaithful? Well the situation is stacked so that if he isn't, someday he may be. Neutral ground girl, he needs neutral ground. Remember he doesn't want to marry her but he has to deal with her and he does want to marry you.

What else that I see, however, is that he does not speak to you with respect. You two have developed a competitive end of complaints about each other. You both have to work on behaving better with and to each other. He needs to demonstrate more respect for you, and you need to demonstrate more maturity.



What I see happening is you will delay the wedding for awhile (so you both can grow up more), and give both of you time to work out these issues. I do see it you getting married; but there is a lot of discussion, promises, actions, and resolutions first. Slow down, it will all work out, eventually - good luck. If you rush it before these differences are resolved it will be a very short marriage. Please consider your goals and outcome. Please don't make marriage a target - instead, make love and compassion, passion and a good life your goal. Good Luck.

Injunction filed by Lakota tribes against BIA reorganization

SIOUX FALLS - Jim Cason, the associate Interior deputy director, told the Senate Indian Affairs Committee last week that over two-thirds of Indian students are failing to meet adequate yearly progress (AYP) under the No Child Left Behind law.

However, the Bush administration has reorganized the Bureau of Indian Affairs and said that the move will help to improve student achievement. Without putting more money into the 184 BIA schools, the government is adding more high level managers, closing six reservation offices and replacing them with three administrative line offices in Pierre, Minot, N.D. and Rapid City.

Last Wednesday, several Lakota tribes files a suit in order to get a restraining order and an injunction in U.S. District court in Sioux Falls to require that the Office of Indian Education Programs and the BIA to consult with tribal governments affected by the reorganization.

Plaintiffs in the lawsuit include, the Yankton Sioux, Flandreau Santee Sioux, Cheyenne River Sioux, the Oglala Sioux, the Standing Rock Sioux, the Turtle Mountain Chippewa, Lower Brule Sioux, Marty Indian School, Loneman School, Porcupine School, and the Wounded Knee School district.

Oglala Sioux Tribal president, Cecilia Fire Thunder said in response to this issue, "In consultation

Fire Thunder suspended for 20 days, council passes motion to ban abortion clinic

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Sioux Tribal Council met in session on Tuesday, May 30 at the Billy Mills hall. Before the council meeting, there was a protest rally by a group of people who walked to the council meeting. They have have been protesting the recent actions of Cecelia Fire Thunder, president of the tribe in regards to her recent statements on developing an abortion clinic on the Pine Ridge reservation.

After much discussion, several motions were made in regards to the abortion clinic issue. One of the discussions were how funds were solicited for the Sacred Choices Wellness Center. A motion was made Garfield Steele, council representative for Wounded Knee district to suspend Cecelia Fire Thunder, president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, without pay for 20 days for soliciting funds without tribal council approval, with a hearing to be held after the 20 days. The motion was seconded by Lyle Jack and Will Peters. The motion passed by 14 for and two not voting. This motion was passed by the council after a motion by Steele failed to suspend Fire Thunder indefinitely.

The tribal council then moved to pass a motion to prohibit any health care facility from performing any abortions within the Pine Ridge reservation boundaries, it was passed unanimously. Also with the motion was to send back any donations for the clinic. The council meeting will conclude on Wednesday at Martin.

Cecelia Montegomery and Cecelia Fire Thunder at the inaugration.

Still on the agenda is a proposal to ban any persons convicted of rape or incest will be banished from the Pine Ridge Reservation. .

Sobriety walk brings awareness of alcoholism and suicide

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

KILGORE, Neb. - The sight of a small crowd of Sicangu Lakota people in the wee hours of the morning in front of the Kilgore bar has to be an eye opening event by any stretch of the imagination. Mike Valandra of the Ici Mani Waste recovery center based on the campus of St. Francis Mission had announced the annual walk several times over KINI FM radio along side Homer White Lance. The event was the annual Kilgore to St. Francis sobriety walk which has been held since 1989 to draw attention to the many deaths that have been attributed to drunk driving.

Valandra was somewhat disappointed at the turnout, but did say, "It was one of the greatest things I have done in my sobriety." The 18 mile walk began at 5:30 a.m. when a bus from the St. Francis Indian School was used to pickup walkers for the ride to Kilgore just over the South Dakota state line.

Twelve people began the walk which began at 6:30 a.m. with Lakota prayers and the four direction song by Homer White Lance who also smudged the walkers to purify them and give them strength for the journey. The walk had been marked out in intervals of four miles where the walkers would stop and pray and words of encouragement were voiced. During the first four mile interval, the youngest walker carried the eagle feather staff

The annual walk has as its objective, to bring awareness of the many Sicangu people who have lost their lives on the way or the return trip from Kilgore. Valandra estimated that over the years, 20 or more people have lost their lives and almost everyone was to an automobile accident.

Songs by Mike Cross and Lawrence "Bear" Cross of Kyle were played as the group walked up the hill and out of the Kilgore area. The narrow road proceeds a couple of miles or more north and then winds around to the east and makes a large half circle before straightening out and pointing north to the Rosebud.

Many a Sicangu traveler has traversed this quiet and less traveled route to Nebraska. Sicangu people will often travel it during the day as a cut across to shop in Sicangu elder, Dorothy Fish, along with grandson, Lakota, participated in the annual Kilgore to St. Francis soberiety walk to create awareness of the recent suicides and the tremendous loss due to drunk drivers that have resulted in many deaths over the years.

meetings, the tribes have consistently told the BIA we didn't want this. When you put more money into administration to meet the mandates of NCLB rather than giving the tribe more money to meet AYP and to provide for learning of our students, the BIA put more money into their administration.., As a nation we need to talk about this in a realistic manner, look at it reservation by reservation. Knowing basic fundamentals of reading, and math, education is the answer to eradicating poverty. To the BIA, we are tired of being told what to do and we need the dollars to provide for our schools."

In a Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe press release dated May 24, Yankton Sioux tribal Chairman, Robert Cournoyer was quoted as saying, "The only region in the Nation losing Education Line Offices is the Great Plains, yet the Great Plains included forty-four percent of high school students attending BIA operated schools. The Great Plains also includes the second highest concentration of total students in OIEP funded schools in the nation behind the Navajo nation.., the decision to close the Education Line Offices located next to tribal schools would be like moving the superintendent of the Rapid City schools to Pierre and expecting better performance. It does not make sense."

Walk brings awareness to alcoholism

Valentine, Neb. There is even a dirt road that one can utilize that winds around to the east in front of a number of farm houses. The trick is not to get lost. The road is often neglected by the road department on either side of the state line and despite that fact, wildlife, deer and even an occasional elk might be seen rushing to get out of the way. The trick is not to drive the road at night as there is little opportunity for assistance and somehow seems scarier.

At one point in the walk a couple of horses came up to the fence as the music was playing. It was seen as a way that the horse nation was honoring the walkers. At every four mile stop, other people joined the walk and the number of walkers numbered close to forty.

Valandra noted that the walk was also meant to bring awareness to the recent suicides of young people on the Rosebud as it is an issue that has been troubling the whole community. A couple of RST council representatives were on the walk and it was appreciated. RST council representatives, Marion Young-One Star and Patsy Valandra took part in the walk that saw everyone complete the 18 miles.

Richard Iyotte, station manager at KINI FM radio also interviewed Valandra and participants on three different occasions, as the last segment from the Spring Creek turnoff to St. Francis saw the largest number of people join the walk. Valandra could be heard appealing to RST president and vice-president and council members to come on out for the last leg of the journey. Only a couple of cars passed by the walkers and that was also noted, as Valandra said in a couple of years they might even be in the walk. The 18 mile walk concluded with a u-turn at the community center and back to the recovery center where fifty some people took part in a meal. The event was made possible by donations by several entities including, RST Finance Office, Frito-Lay, Valandra's II, Paul Mart, the Rosebud Casino, and the St. Francis A.A. group.

Valandra said he would be going on KINI FM radio to do a post-sobriety talk, public service announcement to talk about the success of the event during which saw more walkers than last year due to the nice weather.

Soderlin SBA minority small business of year for South Dakota

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

Kenny Soderlin, of Sod's Mechanical, Minority Small Business of the Year for South Dakota.

MARTIN - Ken Soderlin, the owner of Sod's Mechanical Contracting, Inc. exudes a certain unmistakable enthusiasm when speaking about his work over the years. He attributes much of his success to mentors he has had. He said, "A lot of people have helped me along the way, also my own district representatives. Glen Barber was also a great mentor."

As an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Soderlin is well aware of the tremendous unemployment rate that prevails on the Rosebud and Pine Reservations. When he first got into the construction business, his first contract bid upon was for 40 houses and he was thrilled to have secured that contract. As a minority-owned contractor, Soderlin has employed many Native Americans over the course of his work and says that his work force at any one time might be as high as 90 percent Native American.

He was cited as the Minority Small Business of the Year in South Dakota for 2005. The award was presented to Soderlin on May 12 at the Rushmore Civic center during a meeting of the Black Hills Chamber of Commerce. When speaking of his mentors, Soderlin also said, "Bob Clausen helped me to get started in business. I started with only tools and a pickup truck and one employee."

Joan Walker of the Veterans Administration in Hot Springs nominated Soderlin for the SBA award which draws attention to the tremendous contribution that minority-owned businesses provide in this country. He said, "I still meet people who congratulate me on the award." It is an honor to receive such a prestigious award given the number of small business in South Dakota and Soderlin says that fact will be noted in their portfolio when describing their business.

Currently, Sod's Mechanical Contracting, Inc. employs 11 construction workers and two office personnel. On this day, his workers were in St. Francis, Martin and on the Pine Ridge reservation. He is hoping to expand into other areas of construction, but has not decided which areas those will be.

Sod's Mechanical Contracting, Inc. was started in 1989 and has participated in the Small Business Administration's minority programs for several years now. He also notes that many of his employees have been brothers, sisters, and cousins. The company specializes in plumbing and heating primarily and Soderlin says he now works out of his home office supervising employees and inspecting the work of his employees.

Local golfers get valuable state tournament experience

HOT SPRINGS - Lexi Keckler, a senior at Cheyenne Eagle Butte, was the top Indian Country finisher with a 217 two day total at last week's State A golf championship at the Southern Hills golf course in Hot Springs for a 48th place finish. Tara Hofer of Lead-Deadwood was the individual medalist at 157 and her team won their third straight team championship.

Little Wound freshman, Alyssa Whirlwind Horse, tied for 52nd with a 219. Todd County qualified three golfers and sophomore Shawndai Prue and junior Shauna Gentry tied at 223 and senior Kristin Herman finished at 239.

Freshman Shelby Ross led a three player contingent from Red Cloud with a 226 while sophomore Jacqui White who qualified for her second straight state golf meet come in at 229 and Bobbi White a freshman finished at 242.

"We are working at developing some new talent at Red Cloud," said Wendell Gehman, Red Cloud golf coach, "they did a great job, they are young and they really love the game, we need to find a few more golfers so we are able to field a full team - all of us struggle with the challenge of dealing with the nearest golf courses being 30, 41 and 51 miles away, that makes it difficult to get regular practice in."

Flandreau Indian's Stephanie Grassrope, a junior finished at 234.

The State B golf tourney was held in Sioux Falls at the Prairie Green golf course and included golfers from Takini and Tiospa Zina. Takini's Sam Mendoza finished with a 177 and Josh Reindl had a 199 while Tiospa Zina's Joel Max turned in a 181. Brian Bye of Gayville-Volin ws the medallist at 154 and Sioux Falls Christian won the team title for the B boys. The AA and A boys state golf meets are held in the fall.

Fire Thunder: Issues concerning the tribe

BY AMANDA TAKES WAR BONNETT
Times Editor

PINE RIDGE - On Monday, May 29, Cecelia Fire Thunder, president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe gave an update on various issues with the tribe.

This included her response to the abortion issue, budget shortfalls, Indian Health Service and the grazing ordinance.

"My response to the ban on abortions by rape and incest, is a women's choice issue. I took a strong position as a woman, I also realize there will be repercussions, being the president of the tribe and by saying that, it will create the illusion that this is something OST supports.

"However, that is not the choice. As a president of OST, I do get more airtime and I do not weigh my beliefs, and pull back on what I believe because that is being untrue to yourself. Too often, we think about the political implications and consequently we don't stand by what we believe in. I stand by what I believe in. As president, regardless, I will be criticized and I can't be afraid of that," she said.

"This issue is about women's choice. In the last month, this discussion has gone in many different directions. The bottom line is women of child bearing age, should have access to quality information on contraception's. Second, is to provide information to women to make good choices. We can not mandate sexual activity, if you live a high risk lifestyle, you will be vulnerable to being victimized, in a state of intoxication people will take advantage of you. If you live that high risk lifestyle, you should have the information you need to be able to cope in that lifestyle. "Too many women don't have that information they need to cope in that lifestyle."

"How many young and adult women have been impregnated under the influence of alcohol and the real discussion here is not abortion but how men and women start to respect each other, at a deeper level. How do we bring back that respect we have for each as men and women and ability to be appropriate. People need to sit and talk to each about how we were very mindful, long time ago, it was a hard life, we lived off the land, but at the same time, we built into our culture how we behaved to each other. Even the act of sex was done in a meaningful manner."

"These are the things we need to think about before we do the termination of pregnancy.

A woman should never be forced or coerced or by the use of a firearm to have sex. Rape is the highest report crime, not only Pine Ridge but on every reservation in the state of South Dakota, coupled with high alcohol use by individuals and families. High rates of alcohol abuse leads to inappropriate behaviors and one of those behaviors we know that happens time and time again is sexual behaviors, that is inappropriate."

"In the past two weeks, many people have called me and talked to about these continuing things, including sexual abuse of boys and girls. About being vulnerable in a house where there is drinking and partying and somebody in that home would violate them. You don't need scientific research to connect the dots that alcohol and drugs result in sexual assaults and which, in more times than not, equals unplanned pregnancy."

"Take a look at Indian Health Service and I would say about 80 percent of their budget is providing direct health service to acute needs, which leaves very little money for education, awareness and prevention. Access to contraception is available, however we know in this day and age that Pine Ridge is a large reservation and not everybody can get into clinic. We need to try to get more information out to men and women about the availability of what there is and ways to prevent pregnancy."

"Fire Thunder said a group of women are working to develop a planned wellness center Sacred Choices Wellness Center, and will begin to pull resources together to meet the needs of the women on Pine Ridge. Sacred Choices Women's Clinic is an organization formed by a group of women in response to Fire Thunder's stand that women needed comprehensive medical services and reproductive choice options on the reservation. Culturally specific information will be offered to the women and children along with therapeutic services for women who have been sexually assaulted at any point of their life - children, teens, women and elderly.

She said these services have been denied for too long for our women. Healing and therapeutic recovery can be as recent as five days ago to 50 years ago, women need healing services, she said."

"Support has been coming in from all over the country to donate to this effort and donations that have been contributed to the Oglala Sioux Tribe and have been given to the treasurers office. All contributions collected are being held until a board of directors is in place," she said.

The center will offer contraceptives, planning for parents, therapy, and until the final decision of HB 1215 (abortion law) is made by the state, referrals will be available for termination of pregnancies resulting from acts of violence.

"Women should not be ashamed to talk about our bodies and problems with our bodies. This seems to be a taboo subject. Colonization has taught us to be fear based and avoid these very important discussions among women," she said.

"Choosing to use contraceptives is a good choice. But in a sexually rampant society with a high rate of alcoholism and drug use, there is responsibility that goes along with this. Women should be able to control their own bodies and I.H.S. does not have enough money, and information should be readily available for our women."

Women who are battered will be raped either before, during or after he beats her up he will rape her. "We sometimes don't realize this is rape, this takes from the core of the soul and a woman goes through immense pain and suffering," Fire Thunder said.

The challenge is for the role of men to discuss and to have a great role in the creation of children and need to be talking about this in a sacred way, to be able to make this commitment and being long-term proactive fathers by providing a life with food, a sacred home, and taking care of our children. This is a very important issue, and to bring the focus of respect to our minds and bodies of children and women she emphasized.

"We are in a crisis on this reservation in the terms of number of children who are being made in an unhealthy way. We need to take a look around our communities and see that our young children are having children, and statistics show that many of our children under 16 years of age are being impregnated by men of 25 years old."

"After being on the road for two weeks, I came home and not one person ever contacted me or my office staff to discuss questions or concerns regarding the Sacred Choices Wellness Center. I am therefore asking the people involved in this protest to contact the office to set up a time to discuss this important issue."

Pine Ridge Indian Health Service expansion and law enforcement

The Pine Ridge Indian Health Service will be expanding in terms of adding additional space. There was an issue with I.H.S. Expansion is a go, she said. On May 4, she attended a meeting with IHS officials who presented to Tony Peterson, from the regional office, to have a better understanding on the need for the expansion.

The tribe supported it and the IHS does have the resources to do this.

"Another issue important to the tribe is pandemic planning. Government has given the state lots of funding to do this and there will be discuss ion with the state to bringmore resources to the reservation."

"Another issue involving health is to begin to have dialogue on problem solving on how our people are treated at Regional Hospital, creating a way to provide culturally sensitive training to nursing and hospital staff to treat our people better," she said.

The National native law enforcement has been in existence for 14 years. They finished a comprehensive study on tribal "homeland security" comp survey on six issues: detention, emergency response / disaster, six section instrumental survey, data collected, this is scientifically based and was tested twice, compiled data for 40 tribes. This was reveiewed, and a bill is being put together to be introduced in 2007 February. Research will be done on 160 other tribes who receive BIA Law Enforcement services

Data collected will support the need for additional law enforcement, detention and courts and probation

In tribal talks with NCAI, it was agreed that it is time to do this and move forward

Between now andt hen at the national budget advisory meeting, passed a resolution from tribal leaders to request bureau to fund this effort

All we need is the money and Fort Lewis College, of Durango, Colo will work to provide the college based research.

She said the data from scientific study in regards emergency responses and services, crime rate can translate into addtional services being funded.

Data will leverage resources for other issues in community re:

Tribal leaders want to have a conference pulling together the tribal, state agencies etc. bring them all together so we can have a clearer picture and a collaborative effort in doing a better job of prosecuting offenders to hold people accountable.

"We are going to be asking for consultation with the Bureau of Investigation for federal crimes in Indian country, FBI needs to investigate, we need to make sure there is enough money there to have resources to provide services to the Indian tribes in getting a handle on crimes in Indian country.

She said their has been findings and best practices regarding meth issues in Indian country on a national level.

With the Oglala Sioux Tribe, a task force has been working on developing stronger drug laws and creating

She said an exciting endeavor that has been happening is the move to work with PassNet, to put fixed wing planes on several reservations in South Dakota to speed up the emergency air flights from the reservations to nearby Rapid City or Sioux Falls.

She said this is to save lives. "Many of our people need immediate attention. The time that it takes for the helicopter to get here from Rapid City."

"We would have an airplane readily available and we want to ensure our people who need services will recive the best care to save lives and limbs, etc.," she said.

We want to be able to ue these airplaines to bring in specialists, to provide better care (cardiologists, etc. provide these services to the people vs. making them go other places)

Gaming impacts

She said the casino is on track and moving right along with construction.

"South Dakota tribes in our last two meetings have agreed to form our own South Dakota Gaming Association, because our relationship with the Governor is different than others in the Region who belong to the gaming association. In constant communication wth the governor on the Class III machines, we are at an impass with this dialogue. Tribal leaders have been discussing with their lawyers regarding a meeting on this impass."

"Gov. Rounds has stated he will meet with tribal leaders on any other issues except gaming," she said.

The video lottery terminals generate a lot of money for the State of South Dakota and the revenue supports state operations, if revenue is not there, they will have to tax the people.

The impact of casinos on Indian reservations benefits the counties and surrounding communities

Vendors who provide products and services to the casinos, food, cleaning, office products, etc. benefit and eventually the casino impacts economy in the long run.

The more employees there are at a casino, they will turn and buy products off the reservation, etc. and the economy is then impacted as a whole.

She said out of $200 million that comes to the Pine Ridge reservation, $180 million leaves and goes towards Rapid City or Chadron or other surrounding towns. Tribal members go off reservation to meet shopping needs, going out to eat, to movies, etc.

"Very little money remains on the reservation," she said.

Outside communities need to acknowledge this and began bridge building and other strategies to come up with is keeping the money on reservation or in communities.

Finances

She said the financial situation is based on resolving all these years of bad audits, etc. The tribe has been putting financial records in order "so we were able to answer the questions, for example, regarding disallowed costs."

In 1999 and 2000, several things like the tornado and the Red Cloud building take over put a monkey wrench in everything, right now we are in a negotiating process to get this closed out.

"We are ready to resolve this. In 2000, alternative dispute resolution, entered into an MOA with Indian Health Service.

"There is a process to work through all these questioned costs and come to a common goal. Approximately one million dollars has been negotiated out. We are now moving into an ADR wth the BIA for 2000 and 2003 audit findings," she said.

"We do have internal changes going on. A lot of energy and effort has been made to get these fixed. The past two years have been focused on getting things put together.

"In getting the finances situated we are then able to move into planning for the future.

1. Finding more dollars for law enforcement

2. Comprehensive disaster plans for each community - how ready are we to respond to disaster.

We cannot control mother nature. Natural disasters have been destroying peoples homes, etc. The worworst is tornadoes.

3. We need to finish up accountabily piece and gain financial footing.

Moving towards community based economic development. Getting each community to sit down and determine what they want for the future.

"We have 50 percent of our tribal members who are dependent on the tribe for a homesite.

"Each district needs to create a plan for housing and development. Every district was given a map to determine community center and outward, tribal land and fee land.

She emphasized the infrastructure and she reminds tribal members, of how the water sewer systems are very old, in planning for our future we need to ensure that our community and infrastructure is ready to accomadate for growth and creating more facilities for economic development.

"We as the tribal government want to capture everyones good ideas and protect our investors and help our communities grow,"she said.

"Secretary election, involving the business council and four year staggering terms and now they have to do the recall and the code of ethics. We are going to fast track those into a secretarial election," she added.

"The nursing home on the Nebraska side, we are looking at building a nursing home on the Nebraska side. The EDA and HHS, are looking at what it will take to build that. It is an important component, we will bring our elders back. We are looking at including hospice in the facility.

"The other issue we are looking at, is increasing funding for our senior citizens program in each district.

"Our elderly population we need to expand it in each district, looking at providing more resources for them and the only way we can do that is to ask for more money.

The heat of the summer brings reminders of safety

The heat of summer brings reminders of safety

We are seeing the effects of the sometimes devastating summer weather already.

On Sunday night, the National Weather Service broadcast the thunder storm around Gordon that was headed northeast and spoke of 'flat-line' winds up to 70-80 miles per hour. The term 'flat-line' sounds scary enough let alone having to ponder where the closest tornado shelter might be.

With the summer heat creeping in and the resulting upper air disturbances that occur, Mother Nature is setting us up for another round of being on our toes. Weather spotters, were out and thankfully they were probably doing us a good service by monitoring local conditions.

This is a time when communities and districts should be making sure they have a disaster plan developed. Families have a responsibility to be especially on guard this summer as the bad weather seems to have occurred earlier than last year with a vengeance that most people have thankfully avoided.

We all know that the elements are something we absolutely cannot do something about as earthly humans, therefore, the best we can do is be forever vigilante and educated on how to prepare our tiwahe or family units in the event of drastic weather.

People, who live in mobile homes or in a house with no basement, have to know that they are probably at the greatest risk for damage when a storm comes.

That being the case, they should always have a backup plan as to where they might want to evacuate to.

Many churches and some schools will open their doors for such shelter needs.

We never really think that Mother Nature would go so far as to make us homeless, but we certainly should think of the supplies, medicines and foods items that our families might need if we were temporarily displaced.

In the early days on the northern plains, Lakota people must have been very mobile in order to escape bad hail storms and rain.

It is important to keep our families safe during natural disasters and disaster plans are important for our communities and for our own families.

Judge Fuller a good choice for Indian Country

BY CHARLES ABOUREZK

Abourezk is a Rapid City attorney and retired Justice of the Oglala Sioux Nation Supreme Court, and is a current Justice of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Appellate Court.

This coming Tuesday, June 5, the voters of Shannon County and the other counties of the Seventh Judicial Circuit will finally have a choice, Judge Peter Fuller, who they can vote for with confidence that he will be fair, honest, and sensitive to the people and the issues facing them in Shannon County.

Judge Pete Fuller has, in the past, shown great respect for the rights of the Lakota people of Shannon County.

In one trial in the past few years, he ruled to move the entire jury trial from Hot Springs, where it is usually held, to the Court House on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

This is unusual in the courthouses of South Dakota to find the kind of respect for and inclusiveness of tribal members exhibited by Judge Fuller, tribal members who also happen to be voting citizens of the Seventh Judicial Circuit.

Judge Fuller, who is the current, and most experienced judge up for election on June 5th, is running against two prosecutors.

One is Lance Russell, the current Fall River County States Attorney.

He is the individual who, after police chased tribal member Nick Cummings onto the reservation, challenged the tribal jurisdiction of the Oglala Sioux Tribe in the South Dakota Supreme Court and later the United States Supreme Court.

This case was defended by our law firm, and particularly by our staff attorney Rena Atchison.

Mr. Cummings, a tribal member, won his case in front of the South Dakota Supreme Court and the US Supreme Court refused to hear it, so the Tribe's jurisdiction was preserved.

This is the primary, but I would strongly urge citizens of Shannon County to cast just one vote for the three way race for the Judge of the Seventh Judicial Circuit - Judge Pete Fuller.

He is a wonderful father, a great attorney, and a fair and compassionate judge who has always done the right thing for the state and the people, regardless of race, wealth, or cultural background.

The people of Shannon County can do no better than to vote for Pete Fuller in the upcoming election on June 6th.

Don't forget to vote and take a friend or family member with you to vote.

The Lakota people have shown their power in the recent elections, and this election will turn on how many people get out to vote.

If Shannon County turns out for Judge Fuller, he can win!

Thank you for your support of Judge Peter Fuller on Tuesday, June 6th!

The circle of life and it's many revolutions

By Patty Pourier

The circle of life. The circle made a revolution this week in my life. As I reflect back the revolution was made at many different levels. On Tuesday my Uncle died and on Wednesday, our son and his wife had their fourth child. As we were driving into Martin for the funeral I reflected on the way time is changing stable things that have been here my whole life. I also learned Central Grade School, the country elementary school I attended for all eight years had just graduated its last class of students and was to be closed because of budget constraints.

Central Grade School was to have a final celebration of the close of the school Saturday night. A final celebration for a community that was bonded together by their children attending the same school.

The school opened in the early 1960's. The Civil Rights Movement had not yet happened and schools were still segregated. The school bus would pick up white children from Allen and bus them to the prominently white Central Grade School. There was one family of Native Americans that attended Central, as I remember. The ethnic background of most students was from German and Czech origins who grandparents had homesteaded the area during the Dawes Act. This Act opened up the Pine Ridge Indian reservation in Bennett County for homesteading land that had previously been set aside by the U.S. Government for future generations of Lakota people.

When I attended 1st grade at Central-(there was no kindergarten) Mrs. Jacquot, my 1st grade teacher, was in charge of the pep club as well. We were taught, as 1st graders, to have good sportsmanship-never to boo-to sit and follow the cheerleaders, to be quiet during a free throw, and take a bathroom break only during half time. We said the Pledge of Allegiance, and used the name of God in it, and no one even considered questioning the use of the word. Mrs. Jacobs would use her ruler for more than measuring in the third and fourth grade room.

Mr. Cooper caught us smoking behind the school. I lied and did not receive the swats my sister and friends got. I felt bad about that for years.

But the teacher I most remember and still respect was Mr. Auch. He was my 7th and 8th grade teacher. His discipline was extreme and academic expectations were thought to be too much for the students by our parents. However, when attending college, it was not my high school teachers, but my junior high teacher, Mr. Auch, who taught me the study habits I needed to pass college level courses. His high work ethic and expectations have helped me to achieve accomplishments for the past 4 decades.

I also recall the midget tournament that was played in the old legion in Martin. Teams from around the area attended. The boys prepared for weeks in our gym at Central with Mr. Jacquot, as their coach. Title 9 was not on the books yet, so girls had no sports other than cheerleading at the time. I remember the Interior players that had their numbers hand sewn on their t-shirts AKA jerseys. I learned years later that it was Verna Heathershaw that saw to it the players had numbered jerseys. The tournament was huge and many times the gym was filled to capacity to watch the third grade up to eighth grade players give their all on the court. It was fun as a "real" tournament, with trophies, all tourney players and everything.

Few children, besides Central Grade School attendees, will know the treat it was to have a morning snack of homemade cinnamon rolls, warm out of the oven, and a cold carton of milk at 10 a.m. everyday. Meada Roth, our school cook, prepared them for "her" Central kids.

As mentioned, there was no kindergarten. Neither was their pre school or headstart in those days. I guess people expected mainly moms to prepare their children for the first in the home. I can see where this would be hard today with both parents working to make ends meet, having so many channels on TV and access to a computer that is connected to the world over the internet. Getting interaction between a preschool child's mom on a consistent basis has a lot more competition than it did when I was growing up.

I understand the Rodney and Corey Rayhills, the Kirk Piels and a couple of other Central families prepared food and decorated the gym, for Saturday nights final farewell to an institution that thrived with over a 100 baby boomer students in it's hay day. I am sure there was heartfelt disappointment to them, after thoughtful preparation, that so few attended. I realized how lucky, and how I took for granted, the stability I enjoyed as a child through a sense of community, a neighborhood

This was a confirmation to me. Because, as I gave my uncle's eulogy that morning, I looked up to see the families and friends that made our Central School a community when I grew up. There were fewer and much older neighbors than I remembered. With the lack of attendance at the school farewell, and the aging neighbors I looked upon from the pulpit, I realized, again, that change is happening more rapid then realized and the sense of community I grew up with exists vividly in my memory.

But that it is the only place it still exists, in my memory.

Did you have a neighborhood and sense of community where you grew up? Do you want to recreate that feeling of belonging to your community again where you live now? I want to create the circle of life in my community for my takojas.

Mining company has no more authority to sell stolen land than a thief has to sell his stolen goods

BY CHARMAINE WHITE FACE

Teton Sioux Nation Treaty Council and Coordinator for Defenders of the Black Hills

It is always interesting to me whenever anyone in western South Dakota "sells" their land since the correct English term for "selling" stolen property is "fencing." However, when the state of South Dakota (also an illegal entity) and the federal authorities condone such illegal activities, then what would these otherwise criminal actions properly be called? And who will enforce their prosecution?

Homestake Mining Company's most recent agreement to "sell" land to the state of South Dakota reminds many of us of the historic, illegal trespass into western South Dakota by the gold miners and Homestake Mining Company.

This illegal trespass was a direct violation of the US Constitution, Article VI, and the Congressionally ratified Fort Laramie Treaty of 1868 which was made between the United States and the Great Sioux Nation.

In that Treaty, all of western South Dakota and parts of Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana, and North Dakota were to be for the exclusive use and occupation of the Great Sioux Nation.

The 'Wrongs' were started at the time when President Ulysses S. Grant secretly ordered the US Army not to stop any gold miners from coming into the Treaty territory.

He should have been impeached then and there for violating the Constitution. But greed always has a way of making some people turn a blind eye to atrocities.

Adding the word 'progress' also has a nice ring so immoral and illegal actions are condoned by those that don't care to be called 'greedy.'

The 'Wrongs' continued in the destruction of the economic base of the Great Sioux Nation, the buffalo, and the deliberate spread of smallpox filled blankets, and rotten food. The "sell or starve" treaties that some Sioux leaders were forced into signing in 1877 were still illegal as there was still not the three-fourths adult male signatures as required to change the 1868 Treaty.

Those leaders knew that only a few signatures were not enough to change the Treaty.

The US government also knew that public opinion would not condone the total genocide of the Great Sioux Nation so they created Prisoner-of-War Camps, now commonly known as the Indian Reservations.

Memorial Day to a Lakota

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Originally, Memorial Day was set aside to recognize military veterans who died in the Civil War, however, that was changed to honor all veterans of all American wars. In 1971 it was declared an official holiday by Congress and was to be observed on the last Monday in May.

It also carried the name "Decoration Day" in the beginning and I can remember my grandmother, Charlotte Hawkins-Beauvais, referring to a time when families would decorate the graves of their loved ones. She also called it Decoration Day. As a youngster, I don't believe we had any veterans in our family who had passed on, but in the Lakota community the day is marked with a special remembrance by families who put plates of food on graves containing fruit, candies, and cookies.

I have minimal knowledge of the Lakota significance of this so I am not going to minimize its importance by talking about it. What I will say, is that family members will seek someone out to go over and take the plate home and share the food with their family. It is an honor to be asked to do that and have seen this at the cemetery in St. Francis where my son's grandfather, Lloyd B. One Star, Sr. is buried. He was engaged in 14 battles while in the Navy.

My father and my uncle spent time in Germany and France during WWII and they didn't share a whole lot about their experience, but it was a time that when the conflict ended the troops came home with great honor and fanfare.

Most of us probably have seen pictures of ticker tape parades down Fifth Avenue in New York City. It was memorable, as my dad and uncle were able to see each other on one occasion in Germany when they were there.

I can also remember my grandmother saying that she had gone to a uwipi ceremony to ask the spirits if her two sons would be coming home safely.

They told her they would be and when they returned they both went on to enjoy a fairly typical lifespan.

Lakota people honor our great chiefs and warriors that have gone before us on a continuing basis, while Memorial Day finds us honoring all veterans who have gone before. Lakota people have always fought honorably for the sovereignty of our lands and as we joined America in defending our shores, many Native American veterans also gave their lives for that cause.

During the Vietnam War, we all know the shameful story of soldiers returning from Vietnam with little honor and recognition. I never attended any military funerals at that time as I had just returned home from Pleiku, S. Vietnam myself and was trying to make sense of the war; not an easy task for a young 19 year old in a combat zone.

One night I was in what they called a "hooch" in Vietnam, and the next I was quickly streaming home to be with my family. I can imagine that making such a quick transition may have been a bit much for many combat veterans with little chance to debrief. I remember my brother, Eddie, telling me that he took a Greyhound bus in Oakland, CA so that he could take his time getting home to the Rosebud after coming home from Vietnam, also. It was interesting as him and I also spent a year in the same general location, but at different times.

On this day, I pay tribute to my father, Benjamin F. Beauvais and my uncle, Irvin, for serving as role models for my own service so that I could help to protect our Sicangu nation.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu Lakota) is a decorated Vietnam Veteran. He received a 2006 Harvard AOCC Alumni Award and is the proud father of Beaux, Yvonne, and Anthony. He resides on the Rosebud reservation.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Analogy of a bad tooth ache

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Recently I had an experience that brought to mind an analogy of a toothache in comparison to addiction.

I am nearing that middle age mark and when that time comes, we start to feel the weight of having to take better care of our bodies and our mental attitude. For example, our teeth, it's about this time it's important to take care of them, so they can last us into elderhood.

It was one of those things in life, where we know we have to do it, the old prevention measure, but somehow we don't get around to it until it gets us right where it counts. What I am talking about is getting a toothache. I knew it was coming time to get my fillings redone but I kept putting it off until the day came that it really hurt. It happened on a weekend and in using the Indian Health Service, we have to wait until a week day and use the emergency clinic hours. I had to wait until we got the paper done and by then it was dona days.

So I pacified my toothache pain by using pain killers until I could get to the dentist. What a relief it was to finally get into that dentist chair and know I will have that pain relieved. Or so I thought. By the time the numbness wore off that evening, I realized I had more than one toothache or maybe I just pinpointed the wrong tooth. But then it was the weekend again and so I took pain pills, frozen hot dogs, Oraljel or whatever else I could use to numb the ache. When I ran out of my Ibeprofen and Tylenol wasn't doing the job, I sought out my older sisters for some of their drug stash, whom I knew must have something because I often heard them complaining of aches and pains and what they had to do to relieve it. (of course I say this is jest..)

It was a humbling experience to have the need to kill the ache by using pain pills and whatever else I could find to relieve that pain. I am not a drinker and it was an experience to realize this is how alcoholics and people with drug addictions must feel when they have that need to pacify themselves with something to dull out that need. I saw what alcohol did to my family and I vowed I would not let alcohol affect me that way. Not only to know that feeling but experience the effects of using and how that affects us in our lives.

In taking those pain killers, not only did I dull out my aching toothache pain but the effects it had on me by not being able to be completely focused in daily activities with a clear mind that I took for granted. And the urgent feeling I had in not wanting to deal with that aching throb, so I would make sure I took them within a scheduled time so the pain wouldn't come back.

That is how the cycle of addiction starts off, when a person has an uncomfortable thought, feeling or experience that we are unable to deal with. Sometimes this addiction starts with other substances and activities in childhood and early adulthood before a person decides to try drugs or alcohol. If this uncomfortable feeling cannot be fixed through healthier means that have been used in the past, or if a person does not have any good coping skills, or awareness or prevention methods on how to deal with it, then drugs and alcohol become an easy out. It becomes easy to get started out by taking something to numb that feeling and before we know it, we're stuck in that rut and really don't realize we are doing something that we thought could never happen to us.

Denial happens and it keeps people from realizing they have a problem early on. We turn to these addictive behaviors and believe they are solving our problems and if we don't confront it and get past that denial, then chances are, we will continue these habits as a way to solve our problems.

Sometimes people pacify themselves into an addiction as a result of a traumatizing experiences or crises in their life. Then they turn to drugs or alcohol to cope and soon realize they cannot stop once they started.

If a person believes that drugs and alcohol are solving their problems, then chances are they will continue to use them as a way to solve their problems. Not all people who "use" to cope with that uncomfortable feeling or pain they have in their lives become addicts, but these uncomfortable feelings added to chemical use just adds strength to the cycle of addiction.

Once a person is hooked on drugs or alcohol, they may find that they are unable to control the way that they use the substances. That is how I felt, I knew that what I was loading in my body to numb my aching toothache was probably doing some minimal damage to my liver and it was affecting my ability to keep my mind totally clear and focused.

When we aren't in focus and have that balance, we begin to lose interest in activities, family and relationships that were once important to us, in order to put more effort and focus into using. For some people this can happen overnight or like with me, the dullness I began to feel was for a short period but for others, it can take a long time for the progression to mature as an addiction.

I could have avoided all this, if I just used my common sense or prevention methods by taking care of my problem before it got to the point it did.

My relief to this experience was to just back to the dentist chair and get it done right. Once the culprit was pinpointed and taken care of, I came out of there feeling like a new woman with power because I dumped that pain. It was an experience I don't want to go through again, so I will get to my checkups and take care of my teeth.

When we get to that point in our life when we have uncomfortable feelings or pain in our lives that we can't handle on our own, find what it is that is causing us that pain and find the resources to manage it. Maybe it is easier said than done but it is something to think about.

Notes From Indian Country

Building a business on shifting sands

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

There are those reading my weekly columns that assume I am anti-gambling and that is true to a certain extent.

I find it appalling that so many Native Americans are losing money they can ill afford to lose in the casinos built on their reservations intended to improve economic opportunities for all members of the tribe. If a tribal member is employed at the casino and is addicted to gambling that employee will inevitably put every paycheck back into the coffers of the casino. That may improve the bottom line of the casino but it is hardly beneficial to those employees.

It is also disturbing to me when tribal members that have lived in peace and harmony, side-by-side for generations, suddenly find themselves at odds over tribal membership. In some areas of California tribal members thought to be questionable by their elected governments are simply removed from the tribal rolls.

In a recent case involving the Pechanga Band of Luiseno Indians of California that went all of the way to the U. S. Supreme Court, those members expelled from the tribe appear to have permanently lost their status as tribal members. The Supreme Court merely went with a lower court ruling that upheld the tribal government's actions.

I believe that none of this would have happened if it had not been for the success of the tribe's casino. The smaller the tribe the larger the per capita checks awarded each month. I don't know if this was the case with the Pechanga Band, but there must have been some mitigating circumstances that caused them to remove certain tribal members from their rolls.

Before it ever reached financial independence the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe of eastern South Dakota began awarding per capita payments to tribal members. Soon the warehouse that distributed United States Department of Agriculture commodities was closed because tribal members no longer needed it. And the Tribe began to hire more and more non-Indians to fill the job vacancies at their casino.

But whenever the tribe wants to improve its economic base by bringing other business ventures to the reservation it still goes to its cousin-tribe, the Shakopee in Minnesota, a very wealthy tribe, to plead for monetary grants.

The Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe is located between two communities that can be considered large by South Dakota standards. To the south is Sioux Falls, the fastest growing city in the state, and to the north is Brookings, the seat of South Dakota State University.

During the summer and fall months the casino is packed with gamblers. And yet the tribe appears to be on shaky financial grounds most of the time. Are the ill-conceived per capita payments standing in the way of progress or is there a case of poor management involved or both?

The FSST is now negotiating with South Dakota Governor Mike Rounds in hopes of rewriting the gaming compact to allow for more slot machines. This has been an ongoing process that has dragged on for several years.

They were one of the first tribes in South Dakota to sign a gambling compact with the state and readily accepted the limit of 250 slot machines at that time. Unfortunately, in their haste, the compact they signed set the standard for the compacts about to be negotiated by all of the other tribes in the state and although the Santee Sioux Tribe is very small, the 250 limit on slot machines was applied, not so judiciously, to all of the other tribes in the state.

The much larger tribes such as the Oglala Lakota with more than 25,000 members living on the Pine Ridge Reservation are still limited to the 250 slot machines. The FSST moved forward with its compact without consulting the leadership or considering the vital interests of the other tribes in the state.

The compact they came up with is hardly equitable, but once a precedent is set, it is hard to amend it. We can only hope that in their latest negotiations with the state they are now consulting with the other larger tribes in the state. No tribe is an island.

I believe that per capita payments to every tribal member can also set a dangerous trend. For one, if the tribe is not financially secure yet, it will never reach that point if it starts disbursing funds to every tribal member whether they work or not. In too many cases those tribal members with full time jobs think they no longer have to work once that monthly check starts to arrive.

Tribes that put all of their eggs in one basket are facing an uncertain future at best. In my mind a profitable casino is still a business built on shifting sands.

Every tribe should be looking at alternative business ventures outside of gambling. If the plug were pulled on legalized gambling the tribes would then have something to fall back on.

For the most part legalized gambling has carried mixed blessings for the Indian nations of America. It has given some tribal governments financial independence. It has allowed the Indian nations to become more involved in the political process and has made them a powerful lobby, but not always with great success (reads Jack Abramoff).

But gambling will always be a shaky enterprise based on the whims of the gamblers and the state of the economy. So you see, I can never be 100 percent pro-gaming because it is adrift with too many uncertainties and it often brings out the worst in people and tribes. Money plus greed can play strange tricks on the minds of the once downtrodden.

If there was no one left who remembered the Treaty, then who could remind anyone that this was a gross violation of the very principles that created the Constitution of the United States in the first place.

How many of the grandparents of the trespassers had come to North America because of the oppression in their own homelands? How could they have forgotten so quickly?

Thankfully, for the sake of the people of the United States, and for the survival of the Lakota people, the information of the Treaties continued to be passed on from generation to generation of Lakota people. My grandmother told me and her grandmother told her.

The list of the 'Wrongs' is miles long. But the greatest 'Wrong' is the lie that the federal government told to the non-Indian American people by allowing them to believe that they could homestead in this region.

That lie continues to this day.

Homestake Mining Company has no more authority to sell stolen land than a thief has to sell his stolen goods.

The state, the federal government, or any private individual who continues to participate in these illegal activities is just as guilty as a common criminal convicted of fencing stolen wares.

The state, the federal government, and every individual who becomes aware of this has a responsibility to correct these 'Wrongs.'

The Fort Laramie Treaty of 1868 is still a legal document. The Constitution of the United States is also a legal document.

Both of these were made to insure the survival of their peoples with the ability to live in freedom.

Violating the Treaty by the Federal government was not easy and tens of thousands

Six Red Cloud school students recieve Gates scholarships

PINE RIDGE - In 1999 there was one. By 2004 the number had grown to three. At the 2006 Red Cloud High School Graduation ceremony the announcement that six of the 35 graduating Red Cloud High School seniors were awarded Gates Millennium Scholarships received loud applause. These nationwide scholarships are named after their founders, Bill and Melinda Gates, and originate from the foundation established in their name.

Fr. Paul Coelho S.J., high school principal, said the scholarships cover all unmet need related to attending college and can also be extended to graduate level work as well. Red Cloud has one of the highest per capita number of Gates scholars in the country. The recipients and their college plans are Rianna Albers (University of Minnesota), Jordan Herman (Creighton University), Larissa Little Moon (Chadron State College), Dallas Nelson (University of South Dakota), Marissa O'Bryan (University of South Dakota) and Brandi Shortman (Creighton University). The 2006 recipients bring to 18 the total number of Red Cloud graduates who have earned this distinction since the first Red Cloud Gates Scholar in 1999.

The process for selection to become a Gates scholar begins early in the Junior year when potentially qualified students are identified by the counseling department.

Besides financial need, which qualifies most students at Red Cloud, the four main criteria for selection to become a Gates scholar are a cumulative grade point average of 3.3 or higher, a demonstrated record of community service and leadership, and an extensive record in co-curricular activities. Also, but less quantifiable, judges are looking for evidence of the likelihood that an applicant will succeed in higher education.

This is ascertained through interviews and the quality of the nine essays that students are required to submit. "We are blessed that the tradition of educational excellence is continuing at Red Cloud through the hard work of the teachers and students.

Not only is it a great accomplishment to have six of the seniors being named Gates Scholars but also to know that 100 percent of our graduates have their plans in place to further their education next fall," said Fr. Peter Klink, S.J., president.

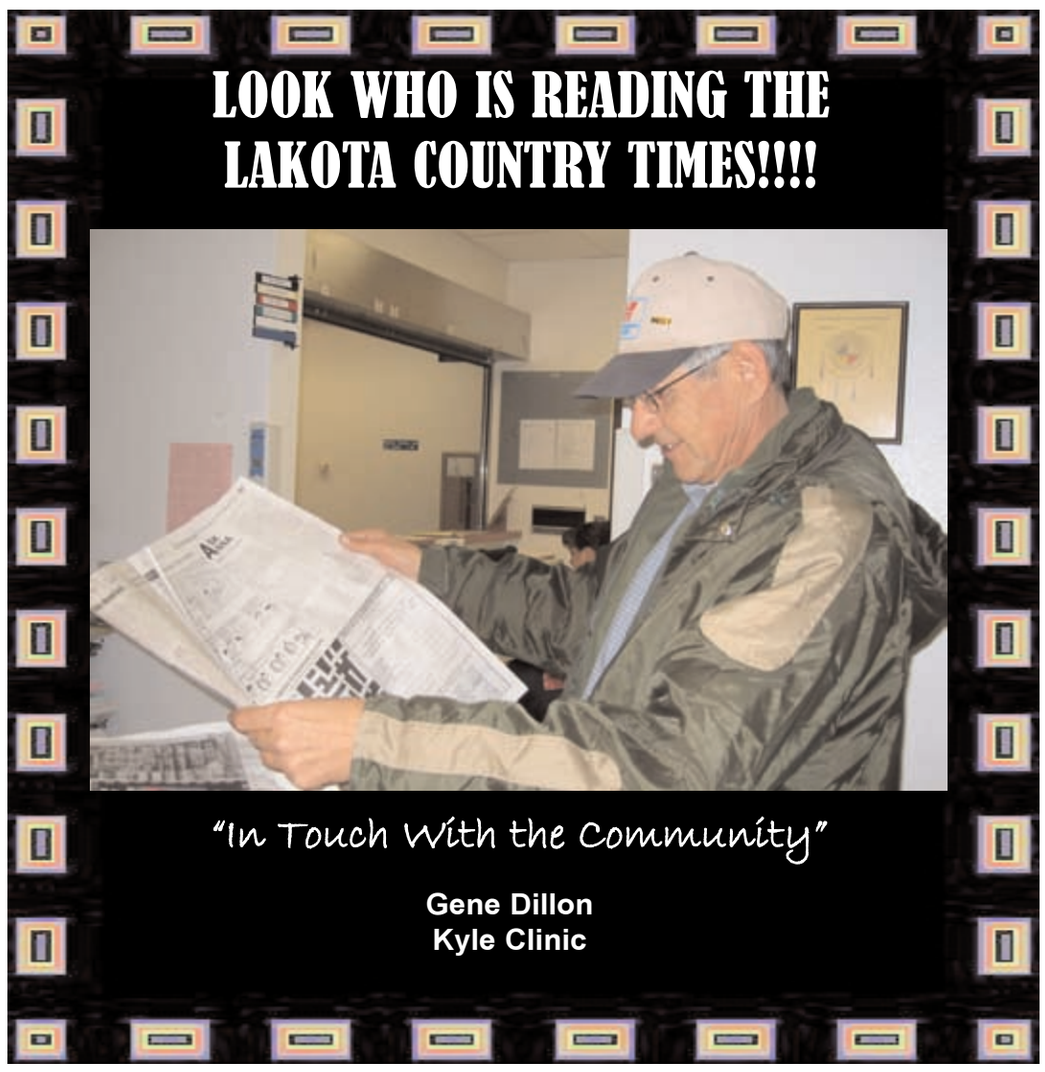
Severe storms leave damage



PINE RIDGE (AP) - Severe thunderstorms in western South Dakota knocked down tree branches, blew off roofs of sheds and flattened some mobile homes Sunday night.

Most affected by the severe storms were Fall River, Shannon, Bennett, Jackson and Jones counties.

Metal roofs were blown off sheds in Martin and two mobile homes were flattened two miles south of Rockyford in Shannon County, officials said. There were no reported injuries. Hail measuring 1 1/4-inches in diameter was reported in Mellette County and Shannon County near Oglala. Wind gusts topped 70 mph in some areas.

A severe thunderstorm in the Pierre area produced golf-ball to quarter-size hail, high winds and heavy rains. Sirens were sounded in Hughes, Stanley and Sully counties but there were no confirmed tornado touchdowns.

Some spotted funnel clouds in an area near Draper, and Kevin Meyers' reported the loss of four outbuildings on his place about five miles north of Draper.

- - Water Conservation Methods - -

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 5th year of drought conditions and every drop of water is precious. Here are some crucial water conservation measures:

- - Be Water-Wise Outdoors - -

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

- - Be Water-Wise Indoors - -

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

New voting machines make debut on reservation

ROSEBUD - On May 16, Rosebud Sioux Tribal President Rodney Bordeaux welcomed South Dakota Secretary of State Chris Nelson at the regularly scheduled May 16 RST Council meeting. The purpose was to present the new voting machines for the upcoming June and November elections.

Because of the provisions of the Help America Vote Act passed after the contentious Florida election results in 2000, Congress required that by 2006, every polling place in America needed to have at least one touch-screen voting machine available. The machines need to be able to accommodate voters with physical handicaps such as blindness and deafness. For example, those who are blind will wear headphones in order to hear their candidate choices.

RST President Bordeaux stated, "I wanted to make sure that Secretary of State Nelson had the opportunity to come before our council and show us these new voting machines. The people of the Rosebud need to be aware of this option when voting in the upcoming state-wide elections." Each voter can choose whether or not they want to use the new machine to cast their ballot.

Above: New voting machine in action! Secretary of State Chris Nelson, RST Representative's Cyril "Whitey" Scott, Scott Herman, and Stephanie Sully test the machine. The machines will be equipped with Lakota words, printed and recorded. Photo by Micheal LaPointe.

Currently, according to Sec. of State Nelson, the immediate challenge is taking Lakota phrases and placing them into the machines for the written Lakota portion. Nelson is working with Dr. Wayne Evans of the University of South Dakota to make sure that problem is accurately addressed. In addition, if a voter chooses to use the audio portion of the voting process they can choose to hear the candidate choices in Lakota when they choose their candidates.

Indian radio group gets $1.5 million grant to enhance tribal stations

SIOUX FALLS - American Indian radio stations have a new partner helping them broadcast an eclectic mix of community programming to reservations throughout the country.

The Center for Native American Radio offers 33 radio stations that serve Indians with programming, accounting, engineering and fundraising, which is a big challenge for most of the noncommercial operations.

A $1.5 million grant from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting established the center, which is overseen by the National Federation of Community Broadcasters in Oakland, Calif.

America's 4.2 million Indians often live on reservations far from each other, increasing the sense of isolation for some of the nation's poorest, most vulnerable groups. Radio stations that cater to their interests could help increase morale, provide networking opportunities and give them a sense that they aren't alone, proponents say.

"We're now this unified group. Before, the stations were sort of on their own, and a lot of them felt isolated," Peggy Berryhill, director of services and planning, said.

"So, now they're beginning to see their collective strengths and share their assets and issues and begin moving forward."

The center doesn't provide funding, but it connects stations with people and groups who know how to find money that's available, she said.

In South Dakota, KILI-FM on Pine Ridge Indian Reservation has been off the air since an April 15 lightning strike. CNAPR referred the station to a consultant who knows how to write grant proposals, said Tom Casey, business manager and development director.

The station requested a $201,000 emergency grant from the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program at the Department of Commerce in Washington, which could help KILI replace the antenna, transmission line and transmitter, and install a grounding system.

The station has six months to raise $40,000 to $50,000 in matching money and is halfway to its goal, Casey said. He said the station has raised more than $23,000.

He hopes to hear back on the grant within weeks.

Honoring our wisdom keepers

HE DOG - On Sunday, May 21 members of the Sicangu Oyate gathered at the community building in He Dog to honor and listen to the elders of the nation.

With about ten elders in attendance and about 50 or so community members gathered to hear their stories, event coordinator and He Dog Community member, Fred Little Bald Eagle was pleased with the turnout.

"It went good. People came out of respect, to honor our elders. We fed them wasna and water, and we prayed," said Little Bald Eagle.

The point was to highlight those elders that are a valuable part of our communities.

"They are like a walking history book. They have a lot to give but nobody asks," said Little Bald Eagle.

"I think elders need to be acknowledged. We need to let them know somebody cares … They are out there. But nobody notices. They are out there but nobody listens."

Little Bald Eagle and He Dog Community Chair Sammy Waln worked together with volunteers from the community to set up an honoring dinner and venue in which the elders could tell their stories. Royce Yellow Hawk provided a drum and singers to honor the elders.

"Everyone came out to help. Everyone did their part," said Little Bald Eagle.

The honoring included a traditional feed of soup, wojapi and frybread.

Much of the community pooled resources to make it happen including Wellness Court, Buches, Mission Shopping Center, Tom Fredricks, the Waln family, Loretta Jordan, and many cooks and helpers.

Sinte Gleska University Archivist Don Moccasin shared memories of his life and relatives with elders and the public at the Honoring Our Wisdom Keepers event in He Dog on May 21.

At the honoring some of the elders in attendance were Mary Quigley, Rose Little Thunder, Ollie Pretty Bird, Alice Four

Rosebud Law Enforcement cruiser crashes while responding to call

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

MISSION - It was approximately 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, May 17 when a police siren could be heard approaching from the west into city limits.

It is a somewhat routine occurrence in most municipalities, especially in Mission, where the Rosebud police have jurisdiction over Sicangu people.

Also, tribal police regularly respond to requests for assistance from tribal citizens on the east side of town in Antelope community or even further at the White Horse housing unit or points south.

Almost immediately, a loud crash and a silencing of the police cruiser could be heard as curious onlookers rushed to the scene.

First responders were quickly on scene as the cruiser had crashed into a pickup pulling a small trailer pulling out of a side road.

The Mission Volunteer Fire Department is located less than a block away and quickly had the street blocked off and local traffic was directed around Moran's gas station and by north elementary and east to main street or by the fire station.

Apparently, Rosebud Law Enforcement Service police officer, Waylon Black Crow, had crashed into the pickup with such impact that it spun his dark blue cruiser around and it came to rest facing west from the direction from where he had come.

Onlookers reported that the front end was severely smashed in and the officer was pinned behind the wheel and had to be freed by the "jaws of life" extrication tool.

A call to the Rosebud Police Department on Tuesday verified the officer's identity as well as the fact that he is currently recovering from the accident at Sioux Valley Hospital in Sioux Falls.

The Rosebud ambulance service was also on scene and a medical evacuation airplane had been ordered and could be seen flying southeast into the Mission airport at approximately 10:30 p.m.

By that time, fluorescent cones and emergency vehicles were still evident as the Todd County sheriff's vehicle, the Rosebud police department; the Mission fire department and the South Dakota Highway Patrol could be seen taking measurements by the light of two huge lights presumably set up by the fire department.

An examination of the accident site revealed the fluorescent markings made by the state Highway Patrol as they reconstructed the accident and marked off the point of impact and the location of the vehicle where it came to rest after the impact.

Horns, Seth Big Crow, Don Moccasin, Lorraine Iron Shell, Vickey At the Straight, Genevieve Moore and Lorraine Walking Bull.

Three of the elders got up to address the attendees. They talked of their birth places, relatives, and how it is now.

They compared how things are to how they used to be.

One elder shared a story about a bull that was stuck in the mud and even though it was in trouble and needed help it wouldn't let anyone near.

Even after they pulled him out of the mud he was still mean.

He used the story to illustrate the situation we find some of our people in today - how they have a hard time but still are angry at those who want to help.

The event was ended with a honoring.

Two of South Dakota's three Indian stations off the air

PINE RIDGE (AP) - Up until a few years ago, South Dakota had four radio stations that served mostly American Indians, but just one of them is currently on the air because of licensing or technical problems:

KSWS-FM at Sisseton lost its FCC license and no longer exists. A Web site has been set up to communicate with members of the Sisseton-Wahpeton tribe.

KILI-FM at Porcupine is awaiting a federal grant to replace and upgrade its equipment. It was knocked off the air April 15 when lightning hit near the station. It serves much of western South Dakota, including the Pine Ridge and Rosebud Indian Reservations.

KLND-FM at McLaughlin has been silent since April 10 because of equipment trouble that it's trying to repair. ``Our converter is pretty much on the blink,'' said Jana Shields-Gipp, board of directors chairman. Engineers tried to go back on the air with limited programming on Wednesday but couldn't because of the technical problems, she said. The station serves mostly the Standing Rock and Cheyenne River reservations.

KINI-FM at St. Francis, which is broadcasting, receives funding from the Catholic church and somehow manages to bring in enough donations to maintain equipment and cover other costs, said Richard Iyotte, general manager.

Its funding sources are limited because of its location, but also because it can't receive public money due to its affiliation with the church, he said. ``We're kind of caught in the middle.''

It serves the Rosebud and Pine Ridge reservations.

The station is owned and managed by the St. Francis Mission.

Wohlleber, White, Mendoza, Andersen win gold at South Dakota State track meet

Youth movement makes mark at state meet

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

SPEARFISH/RAPIDCITY - It used to be the norm that it took experience and maturity to win the longer distances in track, not this year as eighth grader Jordan Wohlleber from Cheyenne Eagle Butte won the 3200 meter run at the State A track meet this past weekend with a time of 11:59.02; Kiko Mendoza of Takini, a freshman, won the State B 3200 in 10:01.36.

The older guys did alright too, Rain Andersen, a senior at Flandreau Indian, won the 3200 in the A in 9:55.39 and was third in the 1600 while Tyrone White a senior at Cheyenne Eagle Butte won the 800 in 2:00.67 and finished just short of a medal in 9th in the 1600.

Wohlleber, who finished third this year in the state cross country meet, also finished 7th in the 1600. Mendoza won the State B cross country title last fall and added a second in the 1600 in the state track meet.

Red Cloud's Marissa O'Bryan finished off her high school career by taking third in the 100 and fourth in the 200 on Saturday in Rapid City and just out of the medals with a 10th place in the 400.

"Marissa really stepped up this year," said Matt Rama, Red Cloud coach, "she did everything we asked of her and more and after qualifying and taking last in both of these events last year, she made the finals and finished high in both events, hard work and a steady focus pays off."

Alex Wilson-Pine from Pine Ridge took third in the 3200 and 5th in the 1600 after winning the State A cross country title this past fall, he is a junior and plans to be back stronger than ever for his senior year. William White Buffalo, a sophomore at Jones County will be back also after taking fifth in the 1600 and 8th in the 3200.

Additional finishers included Gene Morrison/Chamberlain 6th in the 3200 and 8th in the 1600, Frankie Waln/White River was 7th in the 1600, Quddus Defender/McLaughlin was 7th in the 800, Vern Marshall/Little wound was 15th in the 3200, Eltwin Grass Rope/Lower Brule was 12th in the 3200 and 16th in the 1600, Derrick Locke/Tiospa Zina was 13th in the discus, Gunner Krogman/Todd County was 8th in the long jump, James West/Takini was 9th in the long jump while in the 1600 sprint medley Todd County was 22nd and Pine Ridge was 26th.

Additional finishers on the girl's side included: Lisa Two Charge/Todd County was 9th in the 800, Jordyn Cook, a junior at Eagle Butte was 10th in the 3200 and 17th in the 1600, Julie Bernie/Todd County was 21st in the 3200 while Todd County's 4x800 relay team was 10th.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am not "in love" with him, but I live with him.

He is a good guy, and he mostly works hard, and isn't really mean to me, but he gets his shots in. I don't think I want to be here anymore, but I love his family and they are really good to me and my two kids. I want more from my life than what I have right now. I don't know what to do, what do you see for me?

Frustrated

Dear Frustrated:

I see you where you are right now, it looks like for almost another year or so. I see you finally "bursting" out of the relationship, mostly from bad behavior on your part.

That is not a criticism, it is you way of ending what is not really happening for you. To help you with your guilt, sometimes relationships are not meant to last forever, sometimes they are for many reasons and all of them are growth steps.

He deserves, as you do, to be with someone that will love him with all of their heart.

It is not fair to either one of you to continue in a relationship where there is not a common bond of love, just convenience. Try to see if you can find it within yourself to end this relationship, when you are ready, without the chaos that I see in your future.

There might be a more graceful way out. I do see you with another man in a few years, that is more suited to you and your way of thinking. I also see a slim chance that you and your current live-in can reconcile enough to be free from the burden of hating each other.

Dear Anna,

I have been married a long time. I don't drink, I go to ceremonies, and I live my life in a different way than my husband does. To be honest, when we were first married I partied right along with him, but after my kids were born I had to find a different way to live.

I am tired of his late night home arrivals, drunk and obscene. He works and supports me and my kids, and I can count on him for security, but I am so tired of the noise, confusion, and bad-mouthing of me that I could scream.

I don't mind working, and I keep searching for a good job so that I won't need him at all. We have lived in the same house for a long time and I am worried that I will have to leave him, that he will never leave me, and that I will have a tough time finding decent housing. What do you see?

So Tired in Pine Ridge

Dear So Tired:

At least you are practical. I do see immense health problems for your husband in the future. I see him in the hospital with an ultimatum of quitting drinking or choosing a short path to the Spirit World. I do see him quitting, but I also see that even though you are filled with compassion for him, you will feel more of a burden by taking care of him.

I do see you taking care of him, however, and being strong with that burden. If I could change your life, I would tell you to either find him in your heart right now or get out. You are a gracious and loving woman, you are a good mother, and you are a funny person. Your sense of humor and your prayers will keep you in as much balance as any human being could be given the circumstances.

Dear Anna,

The good news is that I won about $1,000 at bingo. The bad news is that I live at home with my mother and I didn't tell her that I won because I wanted to use the money for things for myself and my boyfriend.

The worse news is that people that were at Bingo told my mother that I won, and then I lied to her and told her they were lying. Now I am in a mess, and I don't know what I should do. What do you see?

It's all Gone

Dear All Gone:

Do I look like a band aid to you? (forgive my sarcastic humor). I see that you will tell your mother the truth, that she will understand, even though she doesn't like it, and that life goes on. Next time, please find it in your heart to share your good luck with your mother, she deserves some help with the bills and some recognition for her sacrifices.

You wouldn't have had to give it all to her, but at least a couple of hundred sure would have helped. Oh yeah, I see your mother now requiring you to pay some rent and some money on the utilities.

Your good luck continues as you learn a sense of honoring of your home and automatically offer help to your mother. The good news is that you do feel guilty, and the better news is that you will be given another chance to do right by winning again, sometime in November.

Dear Anna,

I am a man who is very unhappy at home.

I feel angry with the years that I have struggled with this woman. I have found another relationship that I want to pursue, but I don't know how to tell my wife that I want out. What do you see?

Wants out

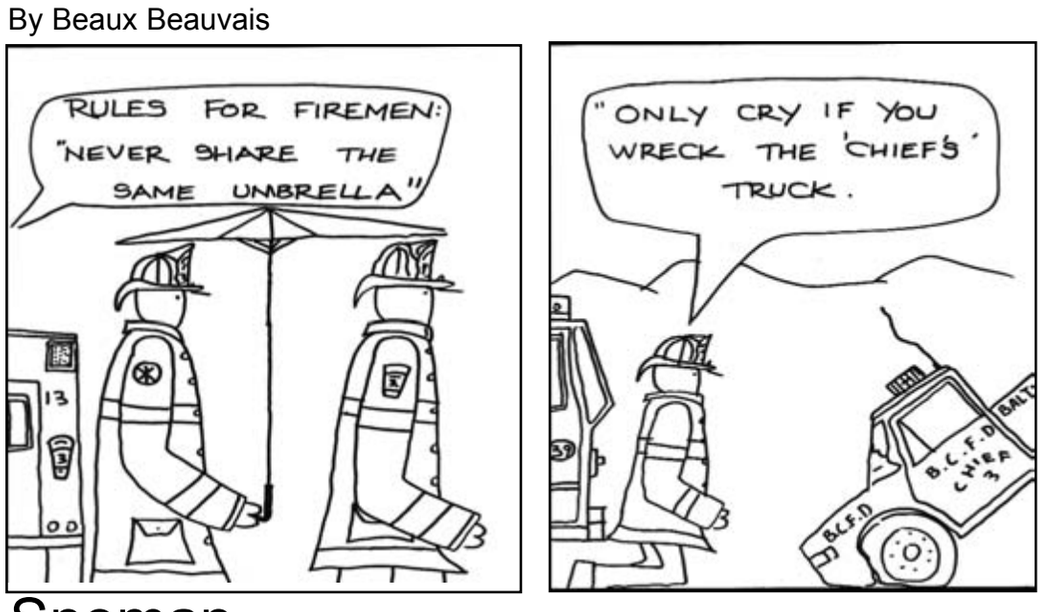
Dear Wants Out:

I see you getting out. It isn't pretty, but amazingly you and your wife will both survive it. I see that she is also weary of the fighting to keep you because she feels you slipping away.

The best way is to tell her, but I don't see you doing that. Instead of that way, I see you having an affair, getting caught, and all the mess that goes with it.

Get your checkbook out, for you have to pay for this. If you wish to change the future a little, suggest counseling for you and your wife, and allow the destination of separation to be arrived to without the messy affair.

If you are really in love with this other woman, it will survive the wait. Let me add that another woman is not a good reason to end a relationship, but unhappiness and irreconcilable differences may be.



You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests maybe subject to publication.

White Clay road blocks to start June 28

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - A number of organizers, including Nebraskans for Peace, Strong Hearts Civil Rights Movement, and supporters from the Cherokee Nation, are planning to set up a blockade on the South Dakota side of the state line to stop people who buy beer and transport it back to the Pine Ridge reservation.

June 28 is the target date when activists will set up the blockade with hopes to quell the purchase of an estimated 12,000 cans of beer a day in Whiteclay.

The plan is to continue the blockade through the summer and into the fall.

Organizers would have their members posted in Whiteclay at any one of the four liquor establishments and would inform those at the blockade as to who was purchasing beer. The activists would then stop the car at the state line and proceed to confiscate their liquor purchases which are illegal on the Pine Ridge reservation.

KILI Radio to be back on air on low power

PORCUPINE - A tower crew and an engineer rolled up the side of Porcupine Butte Monday to hang a one bay antenna about two thirds the way up KILI Radio's 300 foot tower.

"We are working out a way for KILI to get back on the air on a low power basis," said Tracy Krsnak, station engineer, "the company where KILI is going to purchase their new antenna has sent us a one bay loaner, we are hooking it up to the exciter and will get a five or 10 mile radius of coverage - we are looking for an amplifier, 250 to 1,000 watt, which will allow us to broadcast to about a 25-30 mile radius."

"We are excited about getting back on the air, even if it is low power," said Melanie Janis, station manger, "when we get the amp we should be able to cover Pine Ridge, Wounded Knee, Manderson, Porcupine, Sharps, Kyle, Allen and Batesland."

"Every day we are out in the public, everyone wants to know when we will be back on the air," said Tom Casey, "we tell everyone, we will be back, we will be better than ever with a good deal of new equipment, we just can not pin point a date."

The large $201,000 proposal has been submitted to the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program and the station now waits for word on whether it will WINNER - Mary Bordeaux-Hunger (Wi Wasteca Win) celebrated her 100th birthday among friends, relatives, and health care workers on Friday, June 2 at the Winner Regional Healthcare Center. The birthday party for Mary was held from 2:30 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. included many cards from well wishers, and a birthday cake.

President George Bush and wife, Laura, sent a letter of congratulations, as well as the reading of an Executive Proclamation from Governor Mike Rounds proclaiming the day as Mary Bordeaux-Hunger day in South Dakota. Rosebud Sioux Tribal President, Rodney M. Bordeaux, also sent representatives with an RST Executive Proclamation, while Bishop Blasé J. Cupich of the Rapid City Diocese sent a letter of congratulations.

Mary lived at the corner of Adam and Todd streets in Mission since 1940 up until 3 ½ years ago when she moved to the Winner Healthcare Center, according to grand daughter, Monica Hunber-Larvie, who is employed at the Sicangu Wicoti Awayankape Corporation as the Development Officer. She had many friends over the years, including Nellie Menard, Alice Fast Dog, Anna Rose LaPointe, and Victoria Beauvais, a neighbor. She was active in the St. Thomas Catholic parish and often quilted with many of her friends, including the late Nancy White Horse.

Monica said that Mary was rather modest about the public announcement of all her honors, which included an honorary doctorate from SGU, and that she is able to speak normally. At one point, she even joked that the cake might make her fat.

In addition to healthcare staff, Julia Peneaux and Linda Marshall of the RST President's office were

Oglala Lakota College celebrates 33rd graduation with 168 graduates

Herseth set to keynote June 25th ceremony

THREE MILE CREEK - Oglala Lakota College has set their 33rd graduation ceremonies for 10 a.m. Sunday, June 25 at the Three Mile Creek Pow wow grounds at Piya Wiconi with 168 degrees and awards to be presented to students from across Pine Ridge Reservation and beyond.

"We are very excited about having Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth give the keynote address on that special day," said Tom Shortbull, college president, "Stephanie has been very supportive of education in Indian Country and especially supportive of what we are doing here at OLC."

In addition to honoring the many outstanding graduates with masters, baccalaureate and associate degrees, the college announced earlier this spring that it will build dormitories for students in Pine Ridge and Kyle and a restructuring of the college's basic introductory classes in math and reading to prepare incoming students in a better manner for successful completion of their college studies.

Rep. Stephanie Herseth

Herseth serves as South Dakota's at large member of Congress, currently she is completing her first full term as the state's only member of the House of Representatives after being elected in a special election to serve out the term of William Janklow who resigned his seat. Stephanie serves on the Agriculture, Veteran's Affairs and Resources committees, co-chairs the Rural Working Group and is a member of the Blue Dog Coalition, a group of moderate democrats who work for fiscal discipline and strong national security.

Raised on a farm near Houghton, Herseth graduated from Groton high school and earned an undergraduate degree from Georgetown University and followed it up with a law degree, also from Georgetown.

The Herseth family has a long history in state government with Steph's grandfather Ralph serving as governor, her grandmother, Lorna srving as secretary of state and her father, Lars, serving 20 years in the state legislature.

No stranger to Indian Country, Stephanie has been a regular visitor to celebrations, pow wows and special events throughout Indian Country in South Dakota.

Graduation activities begin with the baccalaureate banquet on Thursday, June 22 at 6 p.m. in Kyle at Little Wound school.

The GED graduation is set fort 1 p.m. Friday at Piya Wiconi, the graduation pow wow opening Friday evening at 7 p.m. with grand entries also on Saturday at 1 and 7 p.m. and Sunday after the ceremonies and the graduation set for 10 a..m Sunday.

change in the tremendous impact that alcohol is continuing to inflict on the social and health conditions of the Pine Ridge reservation. He said, "The elders came to me and asked. I and Russell Means took the fight to the Nebraska Liquor Commission. Frank LaMere and Mark Vasina also helped. They said we were bluffing. I presented the complaint to a couple of liquor stores and only one took me seriously, because I know him. This avenue will bring about change. Pine Ridge has the highest rate of involvement and activism. Senator John Thune called right before you did. The treaties are intact and give us a right to take a stand."

The March13 decision by the Sheridan County Board of Commissioners to automatically grant liquor license renewals in Whiteclay and a March 31 by the Nebraska Supreme Court to allow a liquor license to the Arrowhead Inn prompted the decision to undertake the blockade, according to the Lincoln Start Journal. The Journal also included a "viewer comment" in which one reader wrote, "What about Native Americans in South Dakota who are also getting wealthy from selling packaged liquor to people from the reservation such as those who own bars in Oelrichs and Martin?" Another reader, Jon, wrote, "Well, good luck with that. The problem is free enterprise versus the disease of alcoholism. You can't really say that it's a moral issue because anyone who's willing to sell alcohol so close to the reservation doesn't have any."

Furthermore, Martin, Sr. said, "If we don't take a stand today, there won't be a stand tomorrow."

Mark Vasina, the President of Nebraskans for Peace is equally as committed to seeing the blockade succeed. His organization is relying on the Strong Hearts Civil Rights group as they seek to interpret treaty law as it applies to such questions as the legality of confiscating beer purchases and whether or not those in the blockade need to be deputized in order to stop vehicles at the border.

Vasina said, "The need to be deputized is a question for the Indians to resolve. We support what they are doing. We, of course, don't want to see violence. We hope the tribal police will support the blockade. Knowing responsible law enforcement, they have to be there." Furthermore, Vasina said, "People are going to be stopping an illegal action.., my hope is that no other commercial traffic is impeded. People will not be detained or arrested, but simply to prevent alcohol from going in, which is unlawful."

Finally, Vasina said that Nebraskans for Peace support the blockade and are raising money which will be needed to feed people and provide other amenities, while a camp will most likely be erected. He said that his organization is also arranging for celebrities, politicians, and candidates to be at the blockade on June 28. Vasina, himself, will be at the blockade at least two weeks out of each month that it is in effect.

Alex White Plume, Acting President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe said, "This is a grass roots movement at Whiteclay. There will no more alcohol on the reservation. The Oglala Sioux Tribal council passed a tribal resolution declaring Whiteclay a public nuisance. Under the IRA, there is a 12 mile buffer zone to keep bootleggers and alcohol sales from the reservation. I am thinking of deputizing everyone on the blockade. We are inviting everyone from Rosebud and Pine Ridge."

be funded. If funded, the station will be required to provide a $40,000 to $50,000 match.

We are working on the match right now, local dances, food sales and jars and cans around the reservation," said Janis, "and we have put in requests to a variety of foundations, groups and organizations, the National Indian Gaming Association and Shakopee."

"We miss KILI," said tribal vice president Alex White Plume, "all of us miss the station, the grandmas up and down the creek, families and groups and organizations trying to get the word out about their events and activities."

"My food sales have gone down since KILI went down," said Betty Kelly of Betty's Kitchen, "KILI is our lifeline to the community and to each other."

On April 15, the antenna was hit by lightening and has been silence since.

Melanie Janis, station manager, said they have requested enough money to replace the antenna, transmission line and a new grounding system.

Focus on pregnancy risks

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - A $375,000 federal grant to the Yankton Sioux Tribe will be used to assess and monitor American Indian women for pregnancy risks.

Infant mortality in the Indian population in South Dakota is nearly twice the rate among whites.

In January, the state Department of Health said infant mortality increased to 8.2 deaths per 1,000 live births in 2004 _ the highest rate since 1999. The mortality rate for Native American infants is 13.3 per 1,000, compared with 6.9 per 1,000 for white infants.

The goal of the South Dakota Tribal Pregnancy Risk Assessment Monitoring System is to better understand the experiences of Indian mothers before, during and after pregnancy to link their experiences with birth outcomes. The project will include mothers of all Indian infants born in South Dakota.

Women who have recently given birth will be given the opportunity to fill out a survey. Eligible women will begin to receive surveys in the spring of 2007.

Council takes no action on Grazing Ordinance, terminates chief of police

Hearing on Crazy Horse School Board set for June 19 in Wanblee

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

MARTIN - After a protest march and some passionate discussion around the abortion issue on Tuesday which resulted in the suspension of Cecelia Fire Thunder, OST president and a unanimous ordinance banning any abortion for any reason on Pine Ridge reservation, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council met in Martin on Wednesday to finish the agenda.

A number of ranchers and landowners were in attendance to listen first hand to the discussion on a proposed new grazing ordinance for Pine Ridge Reservation. After meeting in a number of districts, Ruth Brown, chair of the land committee brought a new grazing ordinance back to the council floor, it had been tabled at the council meeting last month in Manderson.

"I worked hard at getting input from many people across the reservation, we need a new and improved grazing ordinance," said Brown as she presented the ordinance once again."

After a good deal of discussion a motion to approve the new grazing ordinance made by Brown failed to get a passing vote as eight voted in favor and 10 voted against; with the defeat of the new ordinance, the old ordinance will remain in place.

Wednesday's meeting was attended by nine OST Department of Public Safety employees who had been terminated by the Chief of Police, Ron Duke. The council voted to suspend the employees with pay pending the results of an investigation into the matter.

Stating that a resolution of the tribal council requesting the advertisement of the chief of police position had been reaffirmed during the April meeting of the council with still no results, a motion was made to terminate Ron Duke as chief of police and to put James Twiss in for 30 days while the position is being advertised. Citing insubordination, the council approved the action.

A special tribal council meeting has been set for Monday, June 12 at the CAP office in Porcupine with the OST Department of Public Safety as the only agenda.

The council interrupted their interviews for tribal prosecutors on Tuesday to deal with the abortion issues and no date has been set for their completion. The council did reaffirm their desire to contract the criminal investigation division from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

"We are ready to release the findings of an investigation of the Crazy Horse School board," said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge and chair of the education committee, "this took a lot longer than I thought it would, we have had a good interim board in there to monitor the progress of the school"

In the fall of 2004, the tribal council suspended the school board and replaced them with an interim board. The council has set Monday, June 19 for a special council meeting to hold a hearing on the Crazy Horse school board, it will be held in the commons area of Crazy Horse School in Wanblee.

Herseth set to keynote June 25th ceremony

THREE MILE CREEK - Oglala Lakota College has set their 33rd graduation ceremonies for 10 a.m. Sunday, June 25 at the Three Mile Creek Pow wow grounds at Piya Wiconi with 168 degrees and awards to be presented to students from across Pine Ridge Reservation and beyond.

"We are very excited about having Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth give the keynote address on that special day," said Tom Shortbull, college president, "Stephanie has been very supportive of education in Indian Country and especially supportive of what we are doing here at OLC."

Rep. Stephanie Herseth

In addition to honoring the many outstanding graduates with masters, baccalaureate and associate degrees, the college announced earlier this spring that it will build dormitories for students in Pine Ridge and Kyle and a restructuring of the college's basic introductory classes in math and reading to prepare incoming students in a better manner for successful completion of their college studies.

Herseth serves as South Dakota's at large member of Congress, currently she is completing her first full term as the state's only member of the House of Representatives after being elected in a special election to serve out the term of William Janklow who resigned his seat. Stephanie serves on the Agriculture, Veteran's Affairs and Resources committees, co-chairs the Rural Working Group and is a member of the Blue Dog Coalition, a group of moderate democrats who work for fiscal discipline and strong national security.

Raised on a farm near Houghton, Herseth graduated from Groton high school and earned an undergraduate degree from Georgetown University and followed it up with a law degree, also from Georgetown.

The Herseth family has a long history in state government with Steph's grandfather Ralph serving as governor, her grandmother, Lorna srving as secretary of state and her father, Lars, serving 20 years in the state legislature.

No stranger to Indian Country, Stephanie has been a regular visitor to celebrations, pow wows and special events throughout Indian Country in South Dakota.

Graduation activities begin with the baccalaureate banquet on Thursday, June 22 at 6 p.m. in Kyle at Little Wound school.

The GED graduation is set fort 1 p.m. Friday at Piya Wiconi, the graduation pow wow opening Friday evening at 7 p.m. with grand entries also on Saturday at 1 and 7 p.m. and Sunday after the ceremonies and the graduation set for 10 a..m Sunday.

change in the tremendous impact that alcohol is continuing to inflict on the social and health conditions of the Pine Ridge reservation. He said, "The elders came to me and asked. I and Russell Means took the fight to the Nebraska Liquor Commission. Frank LaMere and Mark Vasina also helped. They said we were bluffing. I presented the complaint to a couple of liquor stores and only one took me seriously, because I know him. This avenue will bring about change. Pine Ridge has the highest rate of involvement and activism. Senator John Thune called right before you did. The treaties are intact and give us a right to take a stand."

The March13 decision by the Sheridan County Board of Commissioners to automatically grant liquor license renewals in Whiteclay and a March 31 by the Nebraska Supreme Court to allow a liquor license to the Arrowhead Inn prompted the decision to undertake the blockade, according to the Lincoln Start Journal. The Journal also included a "viewer comment" in which one reader wrote, "What about Native Americans in South Dakota who are also getting wealthy from selling packaged liquor to people from the reservation such as those who own bars in Oelrichs and Martin?" Another reader, Jon, wrote, "Well, good luck with that. The problem is free enterprise versus the disease of alcoholism. You can't really say that it's a moral issue because anyone who's willing to sell alcohol so close to the reservation doesn't have any."

Furthermore, Martin, Sr. said, "If we don't take a stand today, there won't be a stand tomorrow."

Mark Vasina, the President of Nebraskans for Peace is equally as committed to seeing the blockade succeed. His organization is relying on the Strong Hearts Civil Rights group as they seek to interpret treaty law as it applies to such questions as the legality of confiscating beer purchases and whether or not those in the blockade need to be deputized in order to stop vehicles at the border.

Vasina said, "The need to be deputized is a question for the Indians to resolve. We support what they are doing. We, of course, don't want to see violence. We hope the tribal police will support the blockade. Knowing responsible law enforcement, they have to be there." Furthermore, Vasina said, "People are going to be stopping an illegal action.., my hope is that no other commercial traffic is impeded. People will not be detained or arrested, but simply to prevent alcohol from going in, which is unlawful."

Finally, Vasina said that Nebraskans for Peace support the blockade and are raising money which will be needed to feed people and provide other amenities, while a camp will most likely be erected. He said that his organization is also arranging for celebrities, politicians, and candidates to be at the blockade on June 28. Vasina, himself, will be at the blockade at least two weeks out of each month that it is in effect.

Alex White Plume, Acting President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe said, "This is a grass roots movement at Whiteclay. There will no more alcohol on the reservation. The Oglala Sioux Tribal council passed a tribal resolution declaring Whiteclay a public nuisance. Under the IRA, there is a 12 mile buffer zone to keep bootleggers and alcohol sales from the reservation. I am thinking of deputizing everyone on the blockade. We are inviting everyone from Rosebud and Pine Ridge."

Focus on pregnancy risks

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - A $375,000 federal grant to the Yankton Sioux Tribe will be used to assess and monitor American Indian women for pregnancy risks.

Infant mortality in the Indian population in South Dakota is nearly twice the rate among whites.

In January, the state Department of Health said infant mortality increased to 8.2 deaths per 1,000 live births in 2004 _ the highest rate since 1999. The mortality rate for Native American infants is 13.3 per 1,000, compared with 6.9 per 1,000 for white infants.

The goal of the South Dakota Tribal Pregnancy Risk Assessment Monitoring System is to better understand the experiences of Indian mothers before, during and after pregnancy to link their experiences with birth outcomes. The project will include mothers of all Indian infants born in South Dakota.

Women who have recently given birth will be given the opportunity to fill out a survey. Eligible women will begin to receive surveys in the spring of 2007.

Council takes no action on Grazing Ordinance, terminates chief of police

Hearing on Crazy Horse School Board set for June 19 in Wanblee

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

MARTIN - After a protest march and some passionate discussion around the abortion issue on Tuesday which resulted in the suspension of Cecelia Fire Thunder, OST president and a unanimous ordinance banning any abortion for any reason on Pine Ridge reservation, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council met in Martin on Wednesday to finish the agenda.

A number of ranchers and landowners were in attendance to listen first hand to the discussion on a proposed new grazing ordinance for Pine Ridge Reservation. After meeting in a number of districts, Ruth Brown, chair of the land committee brought a new grazing ordinance back to the council floor, it had been tabled at the council meeting last month in Manderson.

"I worked hard at getting input from many people across the reservation, we need a new and improved grazing ordinance," said Brown as she presented the ordinance once again."

After a good deal of discussion a motion to approve the new grazing ordinance made by Brown failed to get a passing vote as eight voted in favor and 10 voted against; with the defeat of the new ordinance, the old ordinance will remain in place.

Wednesday's meeting was attended by nine OST Department of Public Safety employees who had been terminated by the Chief of Police, Ron Duke. The council voted to suspend the employees with pay pending the results of an investigation into the matter.

Stating that a resolution of the tribal council requesting the advertisement of the chief of police position had been reaffirmed during the April meeting of the council with still no results, a motion was made to terminate Ron Duke as chief of police and to put James Twiss in for 30 days while the position is being advertised. Citing insubordination, the council approved the action.

A special tribal council meeting has been set for Monday, June 12 at the CAP office in Porcupine with the OST Department of Public Safety as the only agenda.

The council interrupted their interviews for tribal prosecutors on Tuesday to deal with the abortion issues and no date has been set for their completion. The council did reaffirm their desire to contract the criminal investigation division from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

"We are ready to release the findings of an investigation of the Crazy Horse School board," said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge and chair of the education committee, "this took a lot longer than I thought it would, we have had a good interim board in there to monitor the progress of the school"

In the fall of 2004, the tribal council suspended the school board and replaced them with an interim board. The council has set Monday, June 19 for a special council meeting to hold a hearing on the Crazy Horse school board, it will be held in the commons area of Crazy Horse School in Wanblee.

Road blocks between White Clay and Pine Ridge

More than 10 years ago the original Lakota Times' editor Tim Giago wrote an editorial asking the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council to set up road blocks at all off-reservation entrances for two reasons:

One - to check incoming vehicles for alcohol and drugs and - Two: to set a toll fee for all non-residents entering the reservation. Tolls are used on major bridges and tollways across America to collect revenues for states, counties and cities. They are an effective tool that can bring in thousands of dollars. And they can be used effectively as road blocks to check autos for alcohol, drugs and other contraband.

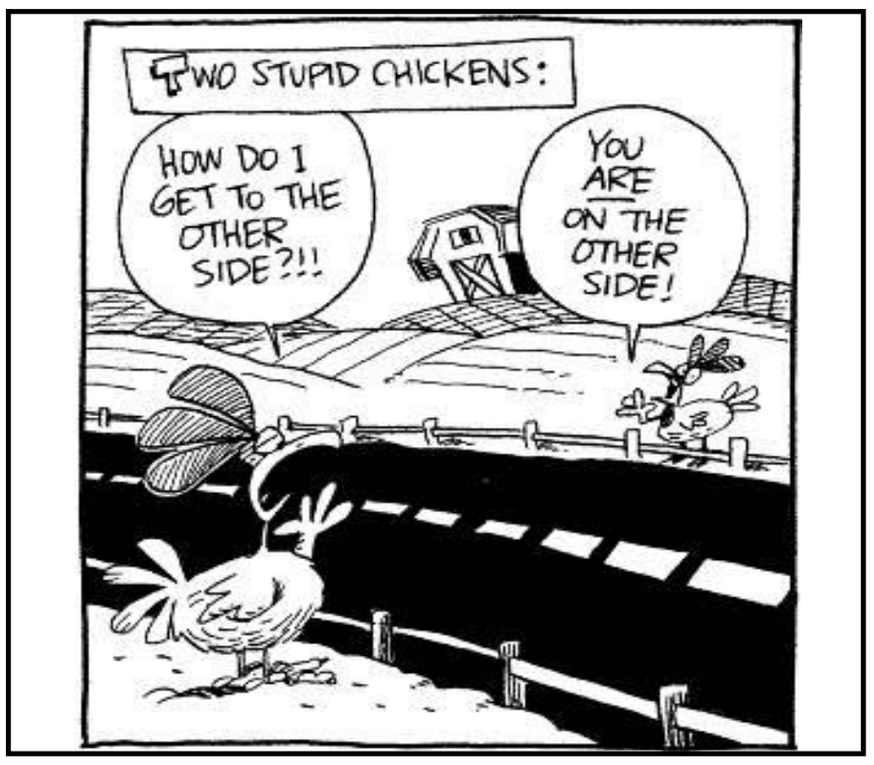
But there are still back doors used by bootleggers and distributors of drugs that appear to be wide-open. It would be fruitless for a road block to be set up strictly between Pine Ridge Village and White Clay to stop the flow of liquor when there are so many other corridors open. Setting up road blocks at the entrance of every road leading on to the reservation and using these road blocks as toll collectors would help to defray the costs of the road blocks. Security police and can be hired to man the road blocks and can be paid from the revenues collected as tolls.

This is a process than can be easily and immediately implemented and the road blocks would become effective tools of law enforcement for stopping the flow of drugs, booze and other contraband to the reservation.

But an effort must also be exerted to halt the influx of all illegal drugs and booze to the distributors and bootleggers on the reservation itself.

Here we go again!

We hope that when the next election rolls around on the Pine Ridge Reservation that all registered voters take a close look at the record of those council men and women now holding office. It seems that they did not learn a single lesson from the suspension of President Cecelia Fire Thunder the first time around. Instead they wasted the meager financial resources of the tribe by tying up the operation of the tribal government for 66 days. And now they want to suspend her again for 20 days.



It was the way they went about it that is so disheartening. They did not have the courage to wait until Cecelia was present to defend herself but instead ambushed her while she was out of town for medical reasons. I have been told it is a cowardly way for any council to act and not only that, but looks unethical as can be.

And for the OST Council to fall in lockstep with the all white South Dakota state legislator extremists goes against everything that is Lakota. Cecelia did not solicit money for an abortion clinic. When the article about her idea to build a Planned Parenthood Clinic on the reservation was printed, people from all around America sent contributions. Not one dime of those contributions has been spent.

OST Council, listen carefully: Planned Parenthood Clinics are not about abortion alone. They are about working with and solving the many problems faced by women. Abortion is a very small part of the purpose of Planned Parenthood. This includes preventing pregnancy and administrating to the needs of victims of rape and incest. One of the not-so-secret crimes that is far out of proportion on the Pine Ridge Reservation is its violent incidences of rape and incest. It is a vicious cycle that must be addressed and solved and when this Tribal Council allowed itself to be swayed and led around by the nose by the nearly all white state legislative body of South Dakota it severely damages any semblence of sovereignty.

The white folks through their churches and their laws have been eroding the sovereign and traditional rights of the Lakota people for more than 100 years.

Healthy living: one change at a time

BY NATASHA D. BORDEAUX
Rosebud Sioux Tribe
Diabetes Prevention Program

We all take on too much. Whether it is at work or at home we can sometimes overwhelm ourselves with things we need to do.

Experts say the key to overcoming this is to break down chores in to small manageable tasks.

The same goes for making healthy changes in our life.

Sometimes we set our sights on losing 20 pounds with a new diet and a new exercise routine. We start off eating next to nothing of foods we don't particularly like.

We exercise everyday for a couple weeks. But when the newness wears off we realize we miss eating pizza and French fries and since we only lost a couple pounds, it's not really worth it to exercise religiously … and there goes the new healthy routine.

The key to starting on the road to good health is to start small.

A daily walk during lunch hour or in the evening before supper is one way to start exercising.

It is better to start out walking than to start out jogging if you have not exercised for a while.

If your walk is well established and it is getting too easy then start walking a little faster.

Or find a new route with some steeper hills. Walk a little longer. Add on a little at a time.

The moment you go overboard and start to dread your exercise routine because it is too hard is when it is no longer effective. So take it easy and go slow.

It's the same with changing your diet. The best way to start a healthy diet is to simply drink more water.

It may sound simple, but adding eight or more glasses of water a day will do several things.

It will help quell your appetite, it will give you the feeling of being full, it can help get rid of headaches, and it replaces calorie-laden drinks like sugar-coffee, pop, and sports drinks.

Water also helps your body clean itself.

Since most people are constantly dehydrated, adding more water to your diet is the first and best step toward a healthy lifestyle. After two weeks of keeping yourself hydrated you will feel the improvement. In addition, you may even lose a pound or two!

When it comes to other changes to your diet start by learning to eat less of what you already eat.

Most people start by switching to vegetables, lean meats and whole grains when they have never eaten these things and don't like them. Since you have spent your whole life learning to like the taste of salt and fat, it may take a while to re-learn to like healthy foods.

It is better to start out slowly by simply reducing the amount you eat of the foods you normally eat.

After a month or two when you are satisfied that your body has adjusted to eating less, then it is time to start making other changes.

Start with one thing at a time. If you want to start adding vegetables, do so with just three new veggies at a time - like sweet potatoes, broccoli and lettuce.

Look for a few different recipes. Serve at least one of them at every meal and make sure you have a whole bite or two each time.

When eating those three becomes easy (usually in a month or two), move on to another three vegetables.

Once you have six or so vegetables you like to eat regularly it is easy to make sure you get your daily dose of five or more servings a day.

Once you add more vegetables to your diet it may be easier to start cutting out the bad aspects of your diet - mainly salt, fat and sweets. Remember, you don't have to go cold turkey.

Just cut out a little at a time and make changes slowly.

And if you would like some French fries or ice cream go ahead and have some! Just watch those portion sizes.

Remember, you are more likely to make lifestyle changes that last a lifetime when you take them on one at a time.

Good luck and good health!

Thoughts that come from the heart

KILI Radio needs your support!

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

On April 15, a thunderstorm went through the Porcupine area and struck the KILI Radio's antenna. It was old and needed to be replaced, just as the building does.

Regardless, the antenna had been there for the past 23 years and over those years had impacted so many lives, created change and most of all kept us informed.

The radio station has been off the air for close to two months now and hopefully in this next coming week, the KILI Radio airwaves will once again sail the air, maybe not as powerful but enough.

The company that will be building the new antenna has loaned a low level antenna to the radio station.

We were used to the station always being there. The staff and volunteer deejays over the years kept the oyate informed during emergencies, school closings or late starts, it kept us informed of local happenings that are important to our daily lives.

Basketball is a big thing on the rez and alot of us can't afford to go to high school sports, so KILI Radio brought those important games to us. When those students played, they knew they weren't only playing for the audience but they were playing before many listeners.

When we lost loved ones, the memorial songs played let people know of that spiritual journey and of the honor we had of them. When someone died, their family playsed-memorial songs and that helps to get the word out.

For many years, KILI Radio has been broadcasting the tribal council meetings, it not only kept us informed of the decisions our governing body makes but it helped us understand why certain decisions are made.

One of the things of KILI Radio that made it unique, besides being steeped with the Lakota langage and culture, is the fact that the philosophy of the stations allows for both sides of issues.

It allows for Christianity and Lakota spirituality, it allows for tribal government and anti-tribal government.

The radio station has become an important part of our lives.

What the station needs to get back on the air in full power is to replace the antenna, the transmission line, and a new grounding system.

To get this, KILI Radio needs $206,000 and has to come up with one fourth of that amount to qualify for the funding.

A young urban Indian girl from Cleveland, Ohio read about KILI Radio's plight on the Internet and she sent $4 to the station saying, "Your nation is blessed to have such a great radio station like KILI. I am an urban Indian and there is no such thing as native radio here. If I was living in Cleveland and could get KILI Radio, I would turn it on and then rip the knob off! May the Creator bless you with a with a thunderstorm proof transmitter and maybe even a way bigger signal..... who knows it may get to Cleveland."

Her $4 helps and so can yours. It's hard to figure how important we think of KILI radio and yet many of us can't squeeze even a buck out of our pocket to help.

There is supposedly 25,000 residents on Pine Ridge, ff we all just gave even $2, we would have our radio station back on air in full force.

Dig into your pocket and give to KILI radio and help them get back on air.

Putting a fresh face on politics which impact Lakota people

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The new slate of candidates in the South Dakota state congressional races is putting a new face on politics in the state. The Native candidates running for state office are a mixture of Lakota men and women and most are Democrat. On last count 11 of 13 Native candidates running are Democrat. That seems to fit with the traditional philosophy of the party. Most Lakota people have registered as Democrats in a state that is considered a 'red' state or Republican state on election night and most other nights.

The Democrats are usually associated with the color coded "blue" on election night mapping schemes.

Despite being overwhelming Republican, South Dakota has in the past been able to vote into office some rather high profile Democrats in George McGovern and Senator Tom Daschle on the national scene. Democrats Stephanie Herseth and Tim Johnson also fit into that mold by keeping the Democratic Party entrenched in the state.

In the state legislature, the last session saw Theresa Two Bulls (D-Pine Ridge) leading the way for Lakota women and in this election there will be several other Lakota women also running.

In District 27, Two Bulls is running again, as is Maxine Broken Nose who is a Republican. Paula Long Fox of Rapid City, a Democrat, is running for office in District 33.

I believe I read somewhere that Faith Spotted Eagle is running for office from the Lake Andes area. An old colleague of mine, my feeling is that she would be a great state Senator were she to be elected. When I think of many other Lakota men and women, I wonder why many more have not run for office and been elected. There are so many Lakota people who are so very talented and intelligent that they would make excellent legislators. My old student and friend, Jim Bradford, from Pine Ridge is always sharing and communicative when I call him to give me a run down on some latest legislative action. I hope that kind of interaction will continue with the newest Lakota candidates who may be elected into office.

When I think of the 105 elected seats in the South Dakota legislator, it seems rather overwhelming to think that Lakota people can make a difference. However, there was one major example that opened my eyes this past year. There was a measure by some legislators who wanted to take away the Governor's power to negotiate with Lakota tribes who wished to enter into gaming compacts and it was defeated. The bottom line appeared to be that there was some political maneuvering behind the scenes, as they say, and the measure was unanimously defeated. I don't recall if the opposition was a mixture of both parties, but it turned out as good news for Lakota tribes.

I suspect that the defeated measure may have been good for Deadwood also, as the legislator may have had to look at their gaming enterprise as well if it passed.

Gaming in Deadwood and video lottery has been a significant economic benefit for the state and its presence ultimately effects gaming on all of the Lakota reservations. It seems to be one of those hot button issues that will be forever contested by either side.

Good luck to the increasing number of Lakota candidates who are running for a state legislative office.

The grunt work you are doing has great implications for generations to come as that kind of work takes dedication, homework, and a commitment to everything that is Lakota. Blihiciyapi, Lakota ki waciniyapi ca waste icunpo. Doksa tunkasila ki cante tinsiya nahan wowacintanka nicu ktelo."

Notes From Indian Country

Gonzaga honors an editor who called for genocide of the Lakota

By Tim Giago

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

I am often confounded by the antics of mainstream newspapers located in cities with large Indian populations that are so prompt in picking up Indian related news articles from newspapers as far away as California without checking them for facts or by not including the concerns of local Indians in the news releases.

Last Saturday the local daily in Rapid City, published an article from the LA Times concerning an exhibit to honor the 150th birthday of L. Frank Baum, the infamous (at least in Indian country) author of the Wizard of Oz.

The Foley Center Library at Gonzaga University opened the exhibit in the eastern Washington city of Spokane called, "Oz and Beyond: Highlights from the L. Frank Baum Collection of Currie Corbin."

Of course, every American knows about the characters in the book from the movie with Judy Garland that featured the Tin Man, The Cowardly Lion, The Scare Crow and the Wicked Witch of the West. The song "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" by Garland that was almost cut from the film has become an American standard.

On the occasion of Baum's 150th birthday anniversary I would like to point out a few little known facts that I hope will take some of the glitter from this exhibit.

Most Americans know about one horrible day, at least horrible to Native Americans, that occurred on December 29, 1890. It was the day when the officers and enlisted men of the 7th Cavalry, General George Armstrong Custer's old outfit, turned their Hotchkiss guns, their rifles and pistols on the nearly 300 Lakota men, women and children at a creek called Wounded Knee on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota and slaughtered them in an orgy of bloodletting that was dreadful to behold.

My grandmother, Sophie, was a teenage student at Holy Rosary Indian Mission, a school about 10 miles from Wounded Knee, on that day of the bloody massacre. She recounted how soldiers rode on to the grounds of the mission school visibly excited by their actions and talking loudly about their wonderful victory. The Jesuit priests at the mission school made the children bring water and hay to feed the hungry horses of the troopers.

Grandmother Sophie said she could still see blood on the gloves and uniforms of the soldiers.

But, of course, no one told the Indian children at the school of the events of that day even though some of them had relatives that were among the slaughtered.

Six days after the massacre, while the frozen bodies of the Lakota men, women and children were being dumped into a mass grave, L. Frank Baum, the editor of a weekly newspaper in Aberdeen, wrote an editorial calling for the annihilation of any Lakota still alive.

His editorial read in part, "Having wronged them once perhaps we should wrong them again and wipe these untamed and untamable creatures from the face of the earth."

Perhaps it was a sign of the times that the white settlers wanted to see all of the indigenous people destroyed but if any editor had called for genocide against any race of people other than Indians there would have been a huge public outcry.

In an ironic way it reminds me of the millions who remained silent while Jews were herded into concentration camps in Poland and shoved into the gas chambers. The life of an Indian meant as little to the white settlers as the lives of the Jews meant to the Germans.

Perhaps it is prophetic and ironic that L. Frank Baum is honored by Gonzaga University because it is also a Catholic run school as was the Indian mission attended by my grandmother.

There certainly was no outcry by the Catholic missionaries at Holy Rosary Mission following the horrific slaughter of the innocent Lakota men, women and children at Wounded Knee.

For chasing, running down, and slaughtering old men and women, and for firing point blank into pregnant mothers with children in their arms, 21 men of the 7th Cavalry were awarded Medals of Honor, America's highest military award.

The awarding of medals for these acts of bestiality is a blight on the integrity of America and is one mistake made at the height of impassioned and imagined patriotism that should never be allowed to stand.

It is the equivalent of handing out Medals of Honor to the soldiers who murdered the innocent men, women and children at Mai Lai in Vietnam.

L. Frank Baum believed these actions to be honorable and glorious. Not only did he publicly and proudly condone them, he went one step further and in his now infamous editorial called for the slaughter of the remaining Lakota people. Why should I care after more than 100 years?

I care deeply because many of the Lakota people Baum wished to eliminate were my relatives. My grandmother and her parents (my great grandparents) and all of her brothers and sisters made Baum's genocidal list.

L. Frank Baum's call for the slaughter of the Lakota people was no better than Adolph Hitler's call for the elimination of the Jewish people and yet Baum is honored on his 150th birthday. Are any newspapers in the state of Washington protesting this outrage?

I am aghast that our local daily newspaper would run such an article in the land of the Lakota and never, not once, mention the genocidal editorial of L. Frank Baum. The frontier mentality of most white editors often blinds them to the truth.

Little Thunder residence; a renewable energy pilot project

RST utilities commission is committed to renewable energy

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

UPPER CUT MEAT - The RST Tribal Utilities Commission, the Council of Energy Resource Tribes, the Department of Energy, and the National Renewable Energy Labs were allowed time during Sicangu Wicoti Awanyakape's 9th Annual Corporate meeting at the SGU multipurpose building on May 31 to present a mini-workshop on the Little Thunder Clean Energy Education Partnership.

The RST Tribal Utilities Commission, headed by Executive Director Tony Rogers has made a commitment to renewable energy resources and activities and the Little Thunder pilot project appears to be only the beginning of such commitment.

TUC commissioner Ronald L. Neiss explained that the purpose of the Clean Energy Education Partnership was to create a pilot project on clean energy at the residence of Sicangu elders, Cecil and Rose Little Thunder, or Upper Cut Meat. The three bedroom home is located in a very windy location and is cold in the winter time, thus the focus on energy retrofits that will aid in cutting down on costs.

The Little Thunders are an elderly couple whose electricity bills have been relatively high and an energy audit of the house revealed a number of energy deficiencies and heat loss which prompted the Clean Energy Education Partnership to target their house for a number of technological innovations. These new advances in technology to be installed will require monitoring of the equipment by trained workers and a commitment by the family to a project that will be somewhat time consuming.

A geothermal closed loop heat pump, solar panels and small wind turbine are being planned for installation at the residence which has been occupied in January 2005 and is in excellent condition, despite the energy audit.

The energy audit revealed that the crawl space needs insulation on the interior, while the energy efficient compact fluorescent bulbs were recommended.

The partnership that also includes the Intertribal Council on Utility Policy, held an "Action Planning Session" on May 24, and May 25, 2005 in which the Little Thunder pilot project was discussed.

A goal also established at that time is to form a tribal utility business and to examine its viability. Also, the single family project was viewed as a community project that would increase tribal capacity and be able to pass such innovation onto the younger generation of Lakota people.

During the planning session, Ronald L. Neiss spoke of the need to respect Unci Maka, while Ken Haukaas said it was important to involve SGU in developing a curriculum for renewable energy.

The estimated cost in 2005 of the Little Thunder was approximately $3,000 to $4,000 for the heat pump and $4,000 to $10,000 dollars for the wind turbine. Also, the use of a wood stove was also seen as contributing to decreased energy cost and as an expression of increased tribal sovereignty by being able to stay off the power grid of LaCreek Electric, Inc.

During the SWA meeting, Tony Rogers spoke about the role of TUC, while Tweedie Doe of CERT and Roger Taylor of the National Renewable Energy Lab spoke about energy audits, a comparative look at nationwide costs of energy use, and they presented some interesting visual materials for corporate members of SWA.

Sicangu elder Cecil Little Thunder, Sr. celebrates 88 birthday

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

UPPER CUT MEAT - Sicangu elder Cecil Little Thunder proudly sat for a photograph with his World War II veteran's cap which was adorned with appropriate fabric medals.

His wife, Rose, pointed to a picture of Cecil on the wall in which he was outfitted in his brown dress U.S. Army uniform that was typically worn by soldiers during the war. Cecil was stationed in Hawaii when Pearl Harbor was attacked and he later toured the pacific theatre on other assignments.

On this day, his house was relatively crowded with friends, family and visitors from Denver and the occasion was a brief ceremony in which his house had been chosen by the RST utilities commission to serve as a pilot project for energy efficiency using a single family wind turbine. Sicangu medicine man, Roy Stone, Sr. had offered a Lakota prayer to serve as an offering and respect for Unci Maka to initiate the project.

Rose and Cecil Little Thunder have lived at Upper Cut Meat since 1967. Photo by Archie Beauvais.

Rose spoke Lakota and noted that it was Cecil's birthday.

She was not quoted verbatim or word for word, but in Lakota one might say about Cecil's special day, Lakota eya ki, 'ta anpetu' hecunse heyapi. Anpetu wicemna saglogan ake saglogan wahehan hihuni."

Despite the many people moving about, Rose was very hospitable and explained that they had lived in the same area of Upper Cut Meat since 1967. Originally, they lived in a log cabin and one of their previously occupied houses sits nearby. The couple had been married in St. Francis and moved to the area where they raised their children and grandchildren. Lakota life back then even during the 1950 and 60s was much simpler as people gathered loosely in tiospayes. Respect, socializing, and support for each other was likely the manner in which families practiced their interaction and survival.

Cecil apparently has led a fairly active lifestyle, having been seen walking from Upper Cut Meat to Parmelee on many occasions over the years.

He enjoyed playing sports as a youngster and also participated in all the activities that boys typically engage in. That would certainly explain his longevity.

Cecil and Rose's children are, Matthew, Cecil Jr., Stanley, Ernie, Edna, Eva, Milton, Randall and many grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

The Little Thunder's live off of Highway 18 in a beautiful isolated location, while other members of the tiospaye live just over the hill in the direction of wiohiyanpatakiya.

Son, Matthew explained that a mountain lion had been spotted just south of the house the night before and had gone into a gully lined with trees off to the southeast. With the many mountain lion sightings on the Rosebud in recent weeks, it was not surprising to hear such a revelation. "Igmu tanka maniyetu watonhansna wanblakapi."

Bear Butte petition drive comes up short

STURGIS (AP) - A group trying to stop a business owner near Bear Butte from getting a liquor license for the Sturgis motorcycle rally fell short in its effort to put the matter to a vote in Meade County.

Bear Butte International Alliance acknowledged it didn't have enough petition signatures by Tuesday's 5 p.m. filing deadline.

American Indian groups and others have been trying to stop beer and liquor licenses for new businesses near Bear Butte that cater to motorcyclists. Indians consider the Butte sacred and say all the rally related activity disturbs their religious practices.

The fire season is unofficially off and running

ST. FRANCIS - The fire season is unofficially off and running as early morning lightening strikes in the canyons northwest of St. Francis smoldered all day until they caused several fires that were visible as far away as Mission. The fire departments from Mission, Rosebud, and White River were on the scene after sirens could be heard around 4 p.m. and could be seen maneuvering in and out of the canyons checking for hot spots. Rosebud Law Enforcement Services officers were also conducting spot checks of the area. Officer Mark Kettell noted that more than one fire was burning in the area.

Markus Provencial, a Two Strike resident apparently resides in a house about 500 yards from the canyons and confirmed the fact that the fires had been slowly burning all morning. Local emergency scanners could be heard broadcasting as many as four fires simultaneously. By early evening the fires were apparently contained as the billowing white smoke earlier in the afternoon had subsided. (Photo by Beaux Beauvais)

Police say woman found dead in Twin Cities has ties to Pine Ridge

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) - A body found in the trunk of a car has been identified as that of a St. Paul, Minn., mother of five who hadn't been seen by her neighbors for several days.

Police said last Friday the death of Darlene Darling, 47, has been ruled a homicide. Authorities were still investigating.

Darling was an American Indian and has family ties on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota.

Her decomposing body was found Thursday in the trunk of a 1988 Buick sedan on the 600 block of Fuller Avenue in St. Paul.

A cause of death was not immediately determined. Police Officer Pete Crum said authorities do not believe her death was random.

Army secretary recommends Medal of Honor for 'Chief'

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - The secretary of the Army is recommending the nation's highest military honor for the late Woodrow Wilson Keeble, a man known as Chief who is credited with saving his fellow soldiers' lives during the Korean War.

Keeble would be the first Sioux Indian to receive the Medal of Honor if it is approved.

Secretary of the Army Francis Harvey said in a letter to Sen. Tim Johnson, D-S.D., on Wednesday that he will recommend the medal be awarded to Keeble, a member of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe who died in 1982.

Keeble, who was born in Waubay, S.D., was a veteran of World War II and the Korean War, with more than 30 citations, including four Purple Hearts and the Army's second-highest commendation, the Distinguished Service Cross.

Fellow soldiers, family members and others have been urging Congress for years to award Keeble the Medal of Honor. They say he deserves the nation's highest military honor for his actions in Korea in 1951, when he saved his fellow soldiers' lives by taking out more than a dozen of their enemies on a steep hill, even though he himself was wounded.

``After giving this request my careful and personal consideration, it is my recommendation that the award of the Medal of Honor is the appropriate award to recognize Master Sergeant Woodrow W. Keeble's gallant acts,'' Harvey said in the letter Wednesday. ``This brave soldier clearly distinguished himself though his courageous actions.''

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and President Bush still must approve the medal.

William Nichols, of Waynesboro, Va., who was a lieutenant and the leader of Keeble's platoon, said Keeble was ``the best combat soldier that I ever saw.''

Nichols said Harvey's recommendation is pleasing for ``all of us who were involved in those days in October of 1951.''

Harvey's letter came the same day military officials held a ceremony in Wahpeton to present Keeble's widow, Blossom Hawkins-Keeble, with a set of medals to replace those that had been lost or had deteriorated through the years.

Johnson said men in Keeble's company in Korea in 1951 twice submitted recommendations that he receive the Medal of Honor, but both recommendations were lost. In a statement, Johnson called Harvey's recommendation ``a major step'' and promised to see it through.

The Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe in 2002 asked Johnson to help obtain the medal for Keeble.

The National Congress of American Indians passed a resolution in 2005 supporting the medal for Keeble, as did the South Dakota Legislature earlier this year.

In memory of Duane C. Two Bulls

I thought I felt your touch today, in the breeze that rustled by, and then I heard the Angel say "the spirit never dies"

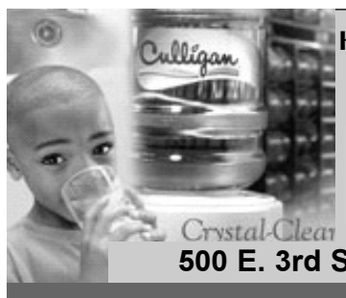
I thought I saw my broken heart in the crescent of the moon and then I heard the Angel say "the Lord is coming soon"

I thought that you had left for the stars, so far above, and then I heard the Angel say, "He left you with his love"

I thought I would miss you so, and never find out my way, and then I heard the Angel say, "He is with you every day, the sun, the wind, the moon, the stars, will be forever around, reminding us of the love we shared... and the peace, he finally found.

The family of Duane would like to thank all those who helped with the flowers, cakes, food, and your support, prayers and kindness during our time of loss. We will forever be grateful.

The family and his children Dan, Eileana, and Duane, we will forever miss his sense of humor, his laughter, his gentleness and his wondering ways, we will miss him but we also find comfort in knowing he is safe and he is home now.



In loving memory of our brother Donald C. Longman

It's been 29 long months since you left us so tragically, so many memories that you left are all that remain, they must keep us going until we meet again.

Brother you are gone but not forgotten.

A memorial dinner will be held at the Inestimable Gift Church on June 17 at 2 p.m. Memorial services will be 1 p.m.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

It seems like I've been in a bad slump financially for the last four months and I have been trying to make a decision about moving to another area because of employment opportunities.

Do you think this will be a good move for me and if so, will things start looking up for me and my family?

Thank you, Undecided

Dear Undecided:

I do see you moving - It looks like a big city, maybe Denver or Pierre? (I see a capital building). It looks like a good decision that will put you back in the positive credit report arena. After working there for awhile you can finally return home where something will open up for you allowing you to live the way you desire.

This move will open you up to new ways of thinking and give you a better understanding of how bigger universities and businesses are run.

Seek employment at a university or college. Many blessings are with you in your seeking of a better and easier life.

Dear Anna,

I read your column and I also have questions to ask. I am currently living with my youngest child's father and our relationship has been off and on for the past four years.

He is currently still married and has just recently had a baby with one of his ex girlfriends from the past. He denies the fact that he is the father of this child. I hear differently from others about the situation with the ex.

It seems that no matter who he is with at the time he always ends up with the ex. It stays on my mind and leaves me with a sad feeling of being troubled but I am no better because I too have a blast from the past that I am currently involved with.

They both tell me how much they love me, yet I am still troubled because I want to settle down. I want to be confident in a relationship so that I can at last find peace and happiness.

I am very insecure and I am afraid to be alone and so I struggle with the troubles in my life.

I would like to know if I will continue living with pain and sorrow or will I settle down with my love from the past.

I can talk with my first love about anything and it feels so comforting to know after all the years that have passed we still have feelings for each other.

Still, I continue with my son's father because I feel sad because he tells me that he loves my son and me and he wouldn't be able to be without us - yet I cannot deal with all the exes from his past who I know he still contacts. I am so confused and hurt constantly.

I need to have peace in my heart. Please don't use my name.

No Name

Dear No Name:

I do see you in the future - not with either one of these men. The current relationship is founded on a parenting responsibility and not much more.

It is hard enough in today's world to have a successful conscious adult relationship with a mate with the basic understanding that the two of you are planning to spend a lifetime together - with common goals and a similar life outlook - let alone for two people that only have a child in common to build a successful relationship. It is not healthy for a child to be subjected to two adults that really do not understand each other, who continually argue and disagree, and who pout all the time about the injuries the other one causes.

Your current man belongs somewhere else. He has another love and has a problem with staying loyal in any relationship. I see him leaving you in a few months, hopefully you won't pull an emotional "crazy" scene at that time and will just let him go because you know in your heart that is the right thing. The "past" man does care for you.

Part of your attraction, however, is that you are "forbidden" fruit. His interest is held in part because you are officially not available - and neither is he. I do see you going back together with him, but because of both of your insecurities and your jealousies, the relationship is bound to fail. For you, a healing of the heart and self-esteem are really necessary for you to create your dream of a peaceful and harmonious relationship.

Please seek counseling and help for codependency and its destructive relationship effects. The characteristics that seem to follow codependent behavior include, but are not limited to: unfounded jealousy, irrational anger at imagined wrongs, rescuing others from their own self-made problems, an inability to be alone (neediness), big time control issues (of others and situations) and constant participation in verbal war (justification and defense mechanisms.)

Conscious relationships are successful relationships. In a conscious relationship, both participants treat each other with respect and are not threatened by outside influences, because both parties want to be together. I do see a man in your future, he is older by about ten years, is sober, has been through treatment, has worked on his own recovery for a while, has a strong spiritual understanding, a good relationship with his mother (I think his father has passed), has two almost grown children, works in construction (building houses is what I see).

Quit worrying about being alone. It will cause you desperate action and cause you to always end up that way. No man is better than the wrong man. Learn about your own power, your own strength and then you won't consume a man with being needy. If you are desperate to be with someone, because you are afraid of being alone, then that energy will perpetuate a lop-sided relationship where you will put up with abusive behavior.

Please work on yourself, so you will be ready for the right man, sometime in the next two years. Life is much longer than just up until 30. The seeds you plant in your behavior can either flower into a happy life or a disastrous one. Good Luck.

RST council hears hospital facility report

$5.2 million collected in third party collections

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Shelly Harris, CEO at the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital presented a facility report for June and her written report noted that as of May, the facility has collected $5,220,073 dollars in third party collections. They are 17 percent below their forecasted goal, however, Data Trak, has been awarded the contract to conduct the billing and the backlog billing.

The hospital is undergoing a number of design alterations in its physical plant in order to efficiently serve the public, while allowing privacy during emergency room triage. The area where the ambulance pulls up and dispatches patients will also be redesigned so that patients are afforded confidentiality. Also, the mental health department will create a waiting room area.

Shelly Harris, CEO of the Rosebud Indian Health Service gave a report to the Rosebud Sioux tribal council.

Dr. Parker, health administrator at the hospital told the tribal council that she has been envisioning a number of ideas that will ultimately ensure better health care. She spoke of creating an affiliation with some university and making the hospital a teaching hospital where physicians can undertake their internship and residencies. She said doctors who work and teach at such hospitals stay current in their field and this enhances health care. She said, "We are interested in getting board certified. There is a high degree of trauma here. We need to recruit people that are board certified."

Antelope council representative Cyril "Whitey" Scott noted that Dr. Parker is a medical doctor and asked how many patients she was treating. She said, "My job is as an administrator. I do rarely pinch hit, however, I have

BIA's Ragsdale to visit tribe next week

RST tribal council honors Red Fish and appoints sergeant at arms

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - It was a full agenda for the RST tribal council on June 14, which was broadcast over KINI FM radio to the Sicangu Nation membership. The council heard bid requests from a couple of lobbying firms, appointed a new sergeant-at-arms, honored a former employee, listened to Shelly Harris deliver the I.H.S. June report, and heard a report from Cleve Her Many Horse, Rosebud Agency superintendent.

The firm of Lockridge, Grindal, and Nauen of Minneapolis and Washington, D.C. made a bid request and presentation to the council. They provided a list of contacts they have leveraged for others. They have represented a number of Minnesota tribes in Washington and hope to represent the Rosebud Sioux. With a price tag of $120,000 dollars per year, RST President Rodney Bordeaux asked if the fee could be adjusted and the firm noted that they could work within that constraint if agreed upon.

The other firm of Gardener, Carton and Douglas of Washington, DC appeared to have extensive experience in working with Native tribes as they represent the Southern Ute and Shakopee, as well as a price tag that was lower than the Lockridge firm. Their fee is $7,500 dollars per month and calculates to $90,000 dollars per year. Their firm was represented by Tom Moorehead and Genny Boylan.

Antelope council representative, Robert Moore, noted that the relationship between RST and the state is tenuous and he had concerns about off reservation gaming, the Mni Wiconi project, and the American Indian Probate Reform Act which he voiced to both firms.

about fifty people who I supervise." Scott also asked about how the 'life or limb' policy was carried out. Harris explained that a committee of medical staff meets each week and discusses those patients who will be referred out through contract health. She said members on the committee come from the public health nursing department, contract health, and social services and is chaired by Dr. Parker. She also noted that the hospital is short seven physicians and is working to prepare recruitment materials that describe the Rosebud area.

RST council representative, Byron Andrews, voiced his frustration at having taken his son to the Wagner I.H.S. service unit because it is closer during emergencies and was referred back to the Rosebud I.H.S. He said that the process is time consuming, especially during an emergency, and that the referral process needs to be more efficient as he still has some bills that have not been paid by contract health. He said that as Rosebud Sioux tribal members entitled to health care such outstanding bills should be paid.

Pine Ridge road projects update

$10 million ready to go to complete the project but the EIS requirement could put us back as much as two years - on top of that, a contractor working for the Bureau is set to file a report that includes the finding of additional gravesites that have the potential to affect each of our proposed routes through Wounded Knee and the massacre site."

In March of this year, the tribal council postponed any decision on a route through Wounded Knee and asked that one or two listening sessions be conducted with residents of the Wounded Knee sub-community and the district. A hearing earlier in the spring at Wounded Knee District school in Manderson resulted in a variety of comments, concerns and issues expressed by community, district and tribal members. Several individuals in attendance complained about the unsafe road conditions that put motorists, pedestrians and school children in danger because of the current condition of the road, while others wanted the road routed around the massacre site to protect the site for future generations and some wanted it built right now with no further delay.

Four hearings were actually set up, Wounded Knee District CAP in Manderson, Wounded Knee community Center, WKD School in Manderson and the Fire Lightening building in the community. In a report to be presented to the council, Whelan states that a total of 53 individuals attended three meetings, the meeting scheduled for the school was pre-empted by a council meeting.

"A total of 51 per cent in attendance voted for alternative four that runs along the current road way through the massacre site," said Whelan, "24 per cent wanted alternative five, south of the site and 26 per cent made no comment."

With the EIS requirement and the new findings of gravesites, it may be 2008 before we are able to start this road construction project, concluded Whelan. The eventual project is set to rebuild BIA Highway 27 from one mile north of Porcupine Butte and KILI Radio to two miles south of Wounded Knee.

Pine Ridge intersection project

"Everyone is a little nervous about the Pine Ridge intersection project," said Whelan, "Oglala Nation is coming up and everyone knows how much traffic we get during that celebration - the contractors have assured me that they will be done no later than July 26, I have encouraged them to finish it as soon as possible."

The Pine Ridge intersection project is a state project designed to rebuild and strengthen the busiest intersection on Pine Ridge Reservation, replacing the asphalt that had a tendency to rut with the heavy traffic with concrete, put in curbs and gutters on the east side of Highway 18 and replace the bridge going toward the old Indian Health Service hospital with a boxed culvert.

According to Whelan, original bids came in close to $4 million and the project was re-bid to come in closer to the engineer's estimate of around $2.5 million.

The project also includes replacing a boxed culvert east of Pine Ridge near Johnson Holy Rock's turnoff and should have included replacing a boxed culvert just east past the airport on Highway 18, I do not know why that was left off the project, it needs to be done, added Whelan.

Base and blotter project north of Loneman

There is a base and blotter project on the road north of Loneman, Highway 41 which is set for completion in about 40 days.

The project includes building up the base of 41 from the White River bridge and north about 9.5 miles. The blotter is a gravel and oil mixture that should last for seven to ten years.

"That will give us time to find the money to asphalt that stretch of road, I hope to find the money to do it sooner than that though," added Whelan.

The project also includes a one and a half to two mile stretch on Highway 16, the road to Grass Creek.

The Oglala to Loneman bike path state project is waiting a final right of way approval and should be completed before the end of this construction season which includes a four mile path with one bridge.

Sunrise Housing Project

The Sunrise Housing project east of Martin has completed final negotiations with the BIA and is waiting for an award letter. The project will feature an asphalt reconstruction for both the old and new Sunrise Housing roads. We will get it started this year but probably won't finish it until next year, according to Whelan.

OST does not have a contract yet for replacement of three old bridges with boxed culverts that include the bridge on Highway 33 just north of Manderson, an old bridge 10 miles north of Manderson by Tibby Kocer's residence and a bridge on a spur, Route 17, off of American Horse road, Highway 21 southwest of Kyle.

"By the time we get the contract we won't be able to get this project completed this year," said Whelan, "my priority is the bridge just north of Manderson because of the number of accidents we have had there so I hope to split the contract to get that one done first, I'd also like to work on getting that stretch of road redone, again because of the number of accidents near this area."

Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth found an extra $1 million for OST transportation. It looks like $250,000 will be used to build a bike path from Pine Ridge to the SuAnn Center east of town and the balance of $750,000 to be used to build a radius curve at the five mile corner on the way to Kyle and eliminate the T intersection; both projects planned for 2007.

Shannon County plans to gravel the road between Batesland and Wounded Knee; the amount of base building on the western portion of that road project will probably require too much time to complete this year and will probably stretch into 2007, according to Whelan.

There has been a base and blotter project in the Oglala area that has been held up due to the disagreement and resulting arbitration hearing between the Oglala Sioux Tribe and C & W Enterprises. The project includes the Lakeside road, the road between Highway 18 and Oglala Housing, the housing area itself and Highway 41 south from Highway 18 to the Nebraska state line about an 11 mile stretch.

"This was a C&W Enterprise project but both the BIA and tribal engineers agreed on terminating the project in the fall of 2005 due to missed deadlines and sub standard work," said Whelan, "we have been negotiating with their bonding company to get this project back on track but the bonding company now wants to wait until a hearing takes place that is coming up with the American Arbitration Association that involves close to $5 million in disputed claims between the OST and C&W Enterprises."

Whelan said he doesn't understand the bonding company's position, normally a bonding company guarantees that the work will be finished if something happens to the original contractor; we need to get this project done, it has been delayed way too long."

Eagle Bull, Conroy earn Shannon County school board terms

BATESLAND - Unofficial results are in for the Shannon County school board election and Angie Eagle Bull, the incumbent earned a third straight term as the top vote getter with 112 votes; past school board member, Chuck Conroy also earned a term as the second highest vote getter with 93.

"It was really important for me to see the new Red Shirt Community School project through to completion," said Eagle Bull, explaining one reason why she ran again; "Red Shirt has been delayed and I really want to see students enroll in a brand new school. Also, this year I got more involved in negotiations as this year we are negotiating with the classified staff, bus drivers, janitors, aides and cooks on leave, benefits and policies, we just completed our second meeting and will have at least one more."

Overall seven candidates ran for two board positions that opened with the expired terms of Eagle Bull and Doni DeCory. Past board member, Gerald Big Crow was third with 73 votes, Tom Vaughn was fourth with 70, Joe Morrisette had 57, William Lone Hill with 46 and Sharon Cuny Martin with 40. A total of 445 votes were cast across eight precincts across Shannon County.

"We have come a long way in the past several years, we are working at hiring more high quality teachers and more local people," said Eagle Bull, "our reading and math scores are going up and I know we can and will continue to improve in tose important areas. We need to make sure we do not lose focus, sometimes we end up with too many personnel issues at the board level where we need to follow our policies and procedures on a regular basis."

Shannon County schools operates K-8 schools in Batesand, Rockyford, Wolf Creek and Red Shirt providing education for more than 1,100 children, with the large majority being members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. The grand opening and dedication of the new Red Shirt Community School is expected in late august just before the new school year gets underway.

RST council update

Former RST council representative Wright voted sergeant at arms.

Former Rosebud RST council representative, Lenard "Shadow" Wright won a run-off election against Gerald Eagle Bear by a council vote of 9-7 and council representative Moore made the motion to seat Wright, and which was seconded by fellow Antelope council representative Scott Herman. Christine Dunhan of Norris community was in the running; however, she did not get any votes.

She spoke after the final vote and said, "Thank you for allowing me to speak to you. Congratulations to Shadow. I hope you don't run into anyone who speaks Lakota."

Wright was sworn into office by RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux and assumed office immediately. Wright who represented Rosebud community to the tribal council from 1999 to 2005 said, "What I learned as an individual, is how big the job is and the responsibility is awesome. I want to work with the administration and council and help as many people as I can."

Wright said he was aware of the need for the sergeant-at-arms to be able to speak Lakota.

He was also aware that many Lakota speakers who address the council often have someone accompanying them to translate to translate into English.

Eldon Red Fish, retired after 30 years with the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and Lenard 'Shadow' Wright, who was selected sgt. at arms.

Eldon Red Fish honored by RST for 30 years of service

Eldon Red Fish was employed in several capacities over his thirty years with the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, although he grew up in Pine Ridge. He served in the U.S. Army from 1969 to 1975 where he achieved the rank of Sergeant First Class, E-7 and worked in artillery, recruiting and race relations. Red Fish earned a Bachelor of Science degree in sociology from Chadron State College in 1977.

He was presented with a plaque while his wife, Anita, prepared dinner for the council and visitors.

Red Fish is retired now and reports that he is doing a bit of woodworking.

BIA's Ragsdale to visit Rosebud next week

Rosebud Agency superintendent, Cleve Her Many Horse, said during his presentation to the RST tribal council that the agency has completed 496 probate cases representing the period of 1980-2000 and that probate continues to be one of their priorities.

Also, people who wish to conduct genealogical research at the BIA would have to wait until after June.

His office is also cutting back on general assistance to tribal members so that other priority areas, such as child welfare, are not affected by the overall reduction.

He also said that Pat Ragsdale, head of the BIA, would be visiting the Rosebud next week and that anyone wanting to meet with him could call Leanne Beardt at the agency office. The head of BIA law enforcement would also be visiting the Rosebud.

RST president's office hosts Father's Day picnic

ROSEBUD - There was plenty of barbecued steaks, salad, and drinks, not to mention wateca, as the RST President's office hosted a back yard barbecue at the Canupa Ska Park directly behind the RST tribal building. The occasion was the upcoming Father's Day on Sunday.

The picnic seemed like it was originally intended for RST employees, but many Sicangu fathers and elders came to have a delicious meal that included many door prizes donated by area businesses and tribal programs.

It must have been good for employee morale, as the mood of the crowd sounded happy and congenial. People who won door prizes were even given an ovation, as a light rain attempted to ruin the fun, but most people didn't budge until the door prizes were all given out. Two large cakes marking the occasion stood by on the table and were later served inside in the council chambers.

Pat Bad Hand called out the door prize numbers and he was assisted by RST President, Rodney M. Bordeaux. Hattie Dunham did a very good job of doing the barbecuing, while the tribal secretary's office and others staff set out the food for a buffet style picnic which saw a lot of food left over for people to take home. The afternoon was a lot of fun for tribal employees, council representatives, and tribal members and is an event that goes along way toward boosting employee morale.

Word was received that former RST council representative from Antelope, Al Larvie had died. Larvie was a highly regarded tribal elder who made his mark on the RST tribal council in the 1960's and 70s.

The eagle feather was given by Oglala Lakota College in a previous Veteran's recognition ceremony. (We asked Chris to tie the feather on him) and was kept by his niece, Barb Swan, until his return home. The Standing Buffalo drum group sang the honoring song. His Lakota name, "War Shield"-Wachun-kaha, was given to him by his grandmother. He moved home from Bend, Oregon and now resides in Rushville, Neb. with his younger brother, Frank and family. Another sister, Irene Tibbitts, lives north of Manderson, and another sister, Emma, is deceased.

Another correction was also submitted by Ivan and Stephanie Sorbel.

Stephanie Rae Sorbel, Miss Red Feather Society 2005-2006," has worked all year representing the Red Feather Society in the best way possible. She worked really hard to get things together for her fancy dance special which was given in her honor by her parents and drew at least 20 dancers. It was a very nice special and Honoring that was mistakenly attributed to another girl., Brittany White Eyes.

Thoughts that come from the heart

A memorial tribute to Monte Ecoffey

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Monte Ecoffey was a creative artist and a humorous person, with wit and a passion for truth and accompanying boldness for telling it.

Monte was 40 years old and he died this week. I met Monte many years ago when he came to work for Indian Country Today where I was the editor. He was in sales and marketing and later moved to the southwest in 1994 to manage the Southwest Bureau at Tempe, Ariz. He later worked at some of the local tribal schools as a computer technician and graphic artist.

He had this energy that I admired back then and again I saw that energy when he came to work at Lakota Country Times earlier this year for awhile. Monte was a graphic artist and attended Al Collins Commercial Art School in Tempe. He had his own design services he called Ecoffey Graphics.

He agreed to come to work with me as I needed help with the newspaper. We spent more than a month working together to get the newspaper out each week. It was then that he taught me something valuable that I took to heart. We would often talk, as our desks were side by side, about tribal politics, current issues and things in our lives. He gave me a refreshing view of reservation life that I sometimes forgot.

One day, I was frustrated with how decisions were being made by our leadership within our nation. I commented to him I was working to publish the newspaper and online edition to inform people of what is going on and to get both sides and to be unbiased. Sometimes some people didn't want the other side to be told and sometimes people would get upset at me for telling the other side and how vicious people can get in promoting their agenda. I told him I wanted to do this because people needed to know their language and where they came and to promote healthiness. He told me, "Amanda, there will always be 'haters'" and that was 'something that I had to accept.' "It's a part of life," he said. I found it amusing how he used the term "haters" but came to understand that what he said was true.

He helped me to understand that there will always be another side to an issue and sometimes there isn't always a platform to be able to state that 'other side.'

He enjoyed his dad's radio show and made sure we listened to it when we could on Internet. There were times he and I would have our discussions on what was the 'real truth' and what wasn't. He helped me to revisit my journalism ethics that I sometimes forgot doing this week after week, that the publication that was I was publishing was a public trust and that it should be done with fairness and accuracy and that meant telling both sides and allowing both sides to be told. He reminded me that I should publish what I held in my heart to be true. To look at the minority view in certain issues, as that was valid also.

Monte was a great friend and I don't know why he had to die and I regret I couldn't come forth and talk to him about unsaid things that should have been said.

I know he did many things in his life that made an impact on people.

He had many friends and came from a large family and he had that humor that was good to be around. He had wit and a knack for tartness that made an impact on one. I would remind him of that.

He loved his parents Anita and Frank 'Bob' Ecoffey. I loved hearing him talk about them as it reminded me of my own.

I can't describe his personal agendas but I knew him as a co-worker and for his creative ability and his humor.

Tim Giago wanted me to include his comment on Monte, "I remember Monte as a fresh faced young man eager to learn when he first applied to work for me at the old Lakota Times. He started in the sales department and was soon moving up the ladder with the company. I don't think anybody in the company ever had a bad thing to say about him. He always was cordial, he was a hard worker, and he was always punctual. But more than that, Monte was well liked by everybody who knew him. He was still a young man when he died and he still had a lot of life ahead of him and he will be missed by those who knew him and by his wonderful family."

Dr. Archie Beauvais also commented on his brief workplace interactions with Monte, as he said, "Monte always seemed respectful to me in the brief time I worked with him which was one day a week. He never said anything negative, but he seemed to enjoy it when I and Amanda would debate an issue that related to a news story or some human interest. Monte had a great sense of humor and his writing seemed to be improving in the short time that I knew him. I believe Monte was, indeed, a bright young man who possessed a certain creative energy that was looking to be channeled into the right projects."

Avis Little Eagle, who is now vice chairwoman of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe and publisher of Teton Times, an Indian owned and operated newspaper covering Standing Rock and Cheyenne River Sioux Reservations, "I was deeply saddened when I heard of the death of my good friend and former co-worker Monte Ecoffey, who I had the honor of working with at Lakota Times and Indian Country Today. I will always cherish those memories, because Monte was a very special person who was intelligent, artistic and had a wonderful sense of humor. I will miss him greatly. My condolences to his family and his friends on Pine Ridge and in Rapid City who will also be struggling with this loss."

Another friend of his, Pam Stillman-Rokusek, media relations coordinator at Rapid City Regional Hospital. "I write this in sadness, just having learned of Monte Ecoffey's passing. I worked with Monte for several years at the original Lakota Times. It was easy to become fast friends with Monte – he was very outgoing and joked with everyone. He had a great personality and was always willing to pitch in and help out wherever needed. Monte made a big impression on me. He was smart, skilled, and one of the most creative persons I have ever known. Monte loved music and the arts. Through his work, he strived to shine the spotlight on all the good things going on in Indian country. I will never forget the friendship and good times that we shared. My thoughts and prayers go out to Monte's family and many friends. Rest in peace, dear friend.

I want to thank Avis, Tim, Archie and Pam for the nice words.

Monte was a part of building something for Native America and that was a voice and promoting Indian journalism so we could tell our own stories. He was a part of building a newspaper that soon became national - Indian Country Today.

Those little contributions he did back then become part of a bigger picture that we have today.

Monte did teach me something about 'haters' but he also taught me something with his death.

Show people how you care about them while they are here on this Earth.

I wish I could have told Monte I cared about him while he was here and that we could have wrote these things to him while he was here but I am sure he knew that and I wish I could have prayed with him while he was sick.

Actually I could almost see him give me that little sideways glance he always does… and I knew it meant.. 'just chill.'

Other Views

To the members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe

Dear Editor:

As I read the last issue of Lakota Country Times, I was taken by surprise. It is a rather rare to read a response to a response in the same issue. I get the feeling Mr. Giago and myself are being perceived as childish men engaging in written word bickering.

However, it's my turn, and it will be the last time.

If you carefully ready my response in last week's issue, and Mr. Giago's response on the preceding page, you now know why I was not looking forward to disagreeing with Mr. Giago, did I, or did I not call that one right on the money?

I feel a little correction and elaboration on my part is called for. It was not I who expressed concern that Mr. Giago does not live here. If you read the first paragraph of response, you will find hat was what my constituents expressed. For Mr. Giago to attribute that mindset as belonging to me is absurd. I too have many relatives and friends living off the rez. I would be the first to proclaim that they have all that is afforded to them through their natural birthright as Lakota.

I take offense to the presumption that I am one of those macho idiots who feel they can dictate to a woman in regards to what she can or cannot do with her body.

I have drawn extreme criticism because I do believe that women have the absolute say-so over their own bodies.

I would have preferred to stay out of this issue altogether, being a man who has no right to voice an opinion on what is considered a woman's issue, it would be like demanding to partake of women's ceremonies.

Unfortunately, the President's actions forced the issue on all us.. It was then that the issue became so much bigger than what Tim Giago or Will Peters thought.

It was then that I, as an elected official had to adhere to the Lakota worldview that all life is sacred. I am nothing, my life exists for the People. Were it not for the struggles of the Lakota Oyate then a true Lakota Wicasa would have no purpose in life.

I feel bad for the President, she blew it big time, there were certainly options available to her had she remembered to consult with the Lakota women she claims to advocate for. For example, she should have called for a reservation-wide referendum on the issue of her proposed abortion clinic. Only the women of the Lakota Nation would have been called upon to decide the issue.

The outcome would have been taken as the women of the Nation's decision on the matter. The Lakota men then, would have been called upon to support the women's decision and that would have been that. Or does that sound too much like creating laws supporting our own religious convictions?

Friends and relatives, I will honestly share with you, what ultimately became the deciding factor for me in voting for the ban of abortions on the homeland of the Lakota. I am fearful of the kind of violence that abortion clinics attract. As a councilman, I cannot in good conscience support anything that may result in any tribal member getting hurt of killed.

We all know that abortion clinics are subject to bombings, not to mention the fact that there is a breed of pro-lifers out there who will go so far as to take a life to get their point across. I for one will not expose my People to that kind of danger.

Since the beginning of this administration, there have been Lakota elders involved every step of the way. They have been there on a consistent basis. It is they who have encouraged us when we have done something right. It is those elders whose voices I physically hear and see that I must adhere too.

Mr. Giago's assertion that I should not take constructive criticism as a personal attack is absolutely correct, I respectfully ask the same of him.

We are both doing our jobs in our own respective ways of thinking, but we are both Lakota who basically believe the same things, we must have to have a gentlemen's agreement to disagree without trashing each other.

Our nation will never experience positive progress as long as we continue to drag each other down.

Tribal government can be viewed as such. Corruption, nepotism, cronyism, lack of a business council, lack of separation of powers, an ever deteriorating of our original landbase, weak financial management

Compensation to Lakota river tribes deserves another look

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The Winter's Doctrine apparently was relied upon to spell out the rights of those Lakota tribes who had original claim to the Missouri River. I have a sense that the Sicangu Nation was once located near the Missouri, also but I have not actually studied they issue. I do know that our Sinte Gleska agency was relocated a couple times, if not more.

Without perusing the doctrine, as one might say in the wasicu world view, it appears that two sister Lakota tribes are in being confronted with skepticism as they are seeking additional compensation from the government for lands taken in the 1940's and 60's. The original land is forever valuable to the Crow Creek Sioux and Lower Brule Sioux and even by today's standard, it is impossible to put a price on someone's homeland.

My sense is that their current assessed valuation should be much higher than the original $39 million for Lower Brule and $68 for Crow Creek.

Wasicu ki daku eyuha unhapi ki cinpi, ca makoce Missouri River isakip iyanke ki he ihani wasekela icupi. Maza ska ki jona la unglazupi ca a hecetusni.

Lower Brule (Kule Wicasa) tribal chairman, Michael Jandreau, was seeking equity when Senator John McCain of Arizona, Chair of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee seemed a bit reluctant to re-visit the issue. Lower Brule is asking that an additional $129 million be added to the original trust fund, while Crow Creek is asking that $68 million be added.

McCain, at one time was highly lobbied by tribes seeking a friend in Congress, but in recent months it seems like the honey moon has been over. Coming from a high populated state of Native people, McCain most likely is confronted by such requests all the time.

As Chair of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee, the role is necessarily that of a "gatekeeper." To have one's original homeland taken away by Congressional legislation is akin to other people who have been displaced in the world and we all know that land appreciates with time.

Former RST Council Representative, Darrell Markus, suggested that the Sicangu Nation may also be seeking compensation for the lands which we lost in Kneip v. Rosebud Sioux tribe as our boundaries were reduced by five counties to the present boundaries of the Rosebud. In that case, there was absolutely no compensation and it was as recent as the late 1970's. I think it is worth pursuing.

Apparently, our friends Senator John Thune, Senator Tim Johnson and Byron Dorgan of North Dakota feel that the compensation amount back then was inadequate; Crow Creek tribal chairman, Lester Thompson says that there was no negotiation, but an attitude of 'move or else.'

Many people on the Rosebud support the Crow Creek and Lower Brule in this ongoing effort to be treated with respect, parity, and equity as we seek reparation for imposing an unjust action upon a people who occupied the area first. Whatever doctrine was followed at the time, whether it was 'move or else', 'divine intervention' or some other discovery notion, such outmoded attitude simply doesn't fly in this day in age. Lakota nations are simply too sophisticated in the ways of the world and we deserve respect.

Ethics: a delicate issue where it shouldn't be

By Patty Pourier

A committee I serve on recently was interviewing a candidate for a job. One of the questions asked was to define ethics. Much to my surprise- it was difficult for the candidates to come up with an answer.

Ethics has been defined as not offensive, not insulting, not manipulative, not aggressive, but qualities that are lovely, gracious, and admirable.

The subject of pro-choice or pro-life seem to bring out the topic of who's ethics or morals are right and whose are wrong. You can tell the subject is highly divided just by the way the controversially topic is referred, pro-choice or abortion.

People opposing pro-choice do not refer to the subject as pro-choice, but as abortion, keeping the emphasis on the destruction of the fetus, and keeping away from the woman's choice. In contrast, people supporting pro-choice prefer to use the term pro-life-keeping the emphasis on the woman's right to choose.

For the most part, people draw the line deep in the dirt on this issue and there does not seem to be any middle ground. They are at one end of the line or the other. The one who describes the act as abortion is usually to the far right and the person who describes the act as a pro-choice is at the opposite end or far left.

What about starting to think a little higher than down in the dirt where the line is drawn. What about getting out of the mud, and start to think a little higher than dirt level. Start to think above the line. Start to think with gentleness, love, respect and honor. Start to think with kindness instead of aggression. How could a subject so tender as creation get this ugly?

How can any man or woman who has never been pregnant pass judgment on those who have? Wouldn't it be more appropriate to have the subject of pregnancy and choices of pregnancy discussed in a group of woman who are affected with the dilemma of an unwanted pregnancy, with the goal of being able to support and love the woman and life rather than judge the woman?

Our nation has decided to make decisions by a majority people who are incapable of knowing how it feels to have conceived a baby. We jump on the bandwagon when white people try to make a decision for Indian people, which affect only Indian people.

But why is it all right for men and non-childbearing women to make this decision for pregnant women? Would it be any more appropriate for the state of South Dakota to determine the rate of income tax for people living in Florida?

Or would it be appropriate for a group of women to decide when and how often and under what circumstances a man could ejaculate?

And if a man should be allowed to masturbate? Are the last couple of sentences inappropriate to you?

It seems just as inappropriate to me for the subject of a pregnancy of a woman to be discussed in the arenas I have recently witnessed.

Couldn't there be a spirit of support for a pregnant woman?

Some respect for Creation? Couldn't we have ethics within our governments to not have this delicate issue dragged through the mud on the floor of the tribal council, state legislature, and Supreme Court?

Notes From Indian Country

Bill Gates should look in his own backyard

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Since graduation time is here for Oglala Lakota College on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, and at the other thirty colleges located on Indian reservations across western America, I wanted to know; what happens next?

I called Tom Short Bull, the president of OLC to find out. Short Bull is very proud of the accomplishments of the Indian colleges and well he should be. As I have said so often, the Indian colleges are one of the best-kept secrets in America. They were developed from the hearts and minds of the Indian people. If any critic is looking for an Indian success story in America they need look no further than the Indian colleges.

But in spite of their unequivocal success, they are one of the most under funded college systems in America.

White liberals with good intentions, have told me on innumerable occasions, that the only way Indians will ever pull themselves up out of poverty is to get an education. When I tell these folks about the many success stories of the Indian owned colleges they are usually aghast because they didn't know such a higher educational system existed on Indian reservations.

Short Bull takes pride in the many RN's now working in the Indian hospitals across America that got their degrees from the Indian colleges. He is extremely happy about the many elementary and high school teachers now working in the reservation schools thanks to gaining their degrees at the Indian colleges. The colleges fulfilled the two most basic needs in Indian country first; health and education. They next took on the challenges of bringing businesses and jobs.

Marilyn Kockrow is the Department Chair/Program Coordinator of the Applied Science & Technology Department of Oglala Lakota College. She has been charged with the responsibility of finding ways and means to creating entrepreneurs on the reservation. She said, "One of the first things we need to do in order to be successful is to find ways to bring houses here. If we are to build businesses we need to be able to find homes for the business builders."

Kockrow knows there must be a business code enacted in order to protect prospective business owners and the acquisition of land to build upon must be made much easier by the tribal government. She said, "One thing that discourages people wanting to open businesses here is the difficulties they face in trying to find land or even a building. There is plenty of land but much of it is held in trust or is a part of a fractionated heirship."

The next and probably the biggest problem in securing a loan is that funds through the tribe or the Bureau of Indian Affairs are non-existent. An Indian cannot walk into a bank in one of the towns bordering the reservation (there is no bank on the Pine Ridge Reservation) and secure a loan. If that Indian owns land it is held in trust by the federal government and cannot be used as collateral. And funds for economic development allocated to the BIA have been cut so dramatically that the coffers are nearly empty.

Organizations such as the Lakota Fund have limited resources. They often give small loans, but they are not in a position to extend large loans. If a person wanted to open an auto repair shop it would take somewhere in the neighborhood of $50,000 to $100,000 to get the doors open. If all one has is a dream and nothing else, the dream usually ends at the loan department of a local bank.

U. S. senators and congressmen have known for years that economic development is key to the survival, the revival and the success of Indian nations. I'm not even going to get into casinos here because out here in Indian country the casinos are barely surviving and are not making enough in profits to set up a pool of money for business loans.

Getting a loan through the Small Business Administration is about as difficult as getting the winning ticket in the lottery. South Dakota has been setting aside tax money for budding entrepreneurs called The Redi-Fund. My former newspaper labeled it The Whitey-Fund because 99 percent of the loans it made went to white people.

Tom Short Bull and Marilyn Kockrow have grand and attainable goals for the college and its efforts to train businessmen and women and to assist them in securing the funds to build businesses on the reservation. All they lack is the money. Kockrow said, "Last year we managed to get $40,000 from the Kellogg Fund and other sources and we are trying to raise that to $70,000 next year." That is just a drop in the bucket for the college that hopes to make a difference. It is also a slap in the face to these dedicated people.

Short Bull said, "88 percent of our graduates stay on the reservation to work." How many college communities in America can make that same claim?

While the Bill Gates' of this country are tooling around the world handing out money to poor people of other nations, I get very angry that they do not take a look in their own back yard. Why don't they visit Pine Ridge and have a "sit-down" with Short Bull and Kockrow and talk to the many Indian students just itching to open their own businesses?

If Gates and other billionaires want to meet people so dedicated to a cause that they place it above all else, at times even above their own health, they need to meet Tom Short Bull and Marilyn Kockrow and then they might learn a little bit about the true nature of the American Indian. Until they do, they will never know the meaning of the word "dedication."

system, lack of tribal unity, and the non-stop encroachments of our sovereignty continue to be the biggest factors contributing to the struggles of our People.

It was in this spirit that I challenged Mr. Giago, to help bring these aspects into light. As a man I am willing, but no man or woman can do it by themselves. What is a man or woman without their People? They are nothing.

In closing, I too want to thank Amanda Takes War Bonnett for printing my writings, I know she does not agree with my views, but as a Lakota Woman, she does not silence my voice. For that, she has my respect. Lila wopila tanks icece yelo, Ta Chunku Luta Waunspewicakiya he miyelo, hece tuwelo!

SPAGE VOICE

High fructose syrup: Are we addicted to sweetners?

Dear Editor:

For those of you who don't watch the television show Boston Legal, there was a recent episode in which a fat guy sued the company that made the snacks he claimed he was addicted to, which led at least in part, to his food addiction and resultant obesity. The snack cakes were sweetened with High Fructose Corn Syrup (HFCS) and the "facts" about it as stated in the teleplay by an outraged Shirley, the plaintiff's lawyer, played by Candice Bergen, were, I thought, quite amazing if true. Since seeing that show, I have been researching articles on the subject, and found an article in the Washington Post by Sally Squires, a Post Staff Writer. The article was entitled "Sweet but not so innocent? High Fructose Corn Syrup May Act More Like Fat Than Sugar in the Body"

Here are a few paragraphs that really sum it up:

An advantage of high-fructose corn syrup is that it "'tastes sweeter than refined sugar, making it a popular ingredient for food manufacturers because it enables them to use less," says George A. Bray, former director of Louisiana State University's Pennington Biomedical Research Center in Baton Rouge. As a liquid, the syrup is easier to blend into beverages than refined sugar, according to the National Soft Drink Association (NSDA). Industry taste tests suggested that consumers liked food and drink with high-fructose corn syrup as much as refined beet or cane sugar.

In the 1980s, manufacturing methods improved, prompting a boost in production of high-fructose corn syrup and a drop in price to just pennies below that of refined sugar. "While that may not sound like much to the average consumer, when you consider how many pounds [the soft drink industry buys], it was millions of dollars if not hundreds of millions of dollars in savings," says Drew Davis, NSDA's vice president for federal affairs.

The switch made economic sense and, as Davis notes, "Back then, there was no suggestion that high-fructose corn syrup was metabolized differently" than other sugars. More recent research suggests, however, that there may be some unexpected nutritional consequences of using the syrup. "Fructose is absorbed differently than other sugars", says Bray. "It doesn't register in the body metabolically the same way that glucose does."

For example, consumption of glucose kicks off a cascade of biochemical reactions. It increases production of insulin by the pancreas, which enables sugar in the blood to be transported into cells, where it can be used for energy. It increases production of leptin, a hormone that helps regulate appetite and fat storage, and it suppresses production of another hormone made by the stomach, ghrelin, that helps regulate food intake. It has been theorized that when ghrelin levels drop, as they do after eating carbohydrates composed of glucose, hunger declines.

Fructose is a different story. It "appears to behave more like fat with respect to the hormones involved in body weight regulation," explains Peter Havel, associate professor of nutrition at the University of California, Davis. "Fructose doesn't stimulate insulin secretion. It doesn't increase leptin production or suppress production of ghrelin. That suggests that consuming a lot of fructose, like consuming too much fat, could contribute to weight gain." Whether it actually does do this is not known "because the studies have not been conducted," said Havel.

The body takes in carbs, glucose or sucrose, (a 50-50 mixture of natural glucose and fructose found in table sugar,) the body reacts with insulin and leptin, two hormones that tell the brain the body is satisfied. Hence, leptin is called the "satiety hormone." (You and I might call it the satisfaction hormone and still have it right.) There is a third substance called ghrelin, produced in the stomach, which sends a "full" signal to the brain as well.

High Fructose Corn Syrup does not do this. The body does not "see" it as a carbohydrate, as glucose, or as sucrose, and doesn't react in the usual way. Could a substance that stimulates your pleasure centers while failing to satisfy a basic need be addicting? I think so. That pretty well describes heroin, doesn't it?

Do the people who put the stuff in our food know it's addictive? They claim not, they say it's safe. One way to fight this out is in court, as on the Boston Legal episode. Another way is to not buy the product and see who lives longer.

Diabetes is bad. Many people are born with it. (Type I diabetes.) Some of us acquire it, get it later in life because our pancreas wears out and won't make enough insulin for us to handle sugars. (Type II diabetes.)

But when our kids are getting it in their teens, and our wives and husbands and brothers and sisters get it in their twenties, thirties and forties, it's worse than bad. It's tragic.

In the past, the advancing settlers brought many diseases with them and many Lakota died. We did not know about these things and we paid a heavy price. But now we know. Don't go to the grocery store and buy and eat things that will give you diabetes. Read the ingredients; make your own choices.

It's interesting to note too, from other stuff I found, that our national rate of obesity began to climb the same year the food processing industry began using HFCS. 1983. The first year of the Great Deregulation under Ronald Regan. Hmmm?

The myth of tribal sovereignty?

Dear Editor:

I am a member of the Sicangu Oyate; the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

A while back, I sat down and put some thoughts down on paper that dealt with my concerns in regard to Tribal Nations "Sovereignty".

In the end, I came to the conclusion that Tribal sovereignty was slowly, but steadily becoming a "myth".

The steady and progressive erosion of tribal sovereignty has become increasingly evident with the advent of our casinos. Where once we took a resolute stand against federal and state intrusion and attacks on tribal jurisdiction, leadership now is so fearful of jeopardizing funding, that capitulation and acquiescence has become the norm.

Swallow our pride. Look the other way. We too, have become slaves to the almighty dollar. Some examples:

Taxes:

For years, tribal members have been paying a state imposed "Gross Receipts" tax and a state "PUC" (Public Utilities Commission) tax.

The PUC tax is to help fund the state of South Dakota's Public Utilities Commission, an entity which does not have jurisdiction on the Rosebud Reservation. Regulation and adjudication of utilities is within the jurisdiction of the Rosebud Tribe through its "Utilities Commission."

The Gross Receipts tax is said to be in lieu of a property tax and is to be paid by the telecommunications companies.

Sixty percent is to be used to keep property taxes lower in the state and forty percent goes to the counties.

I pose the questions: If I am a member of a so-called "Sovereign Tribe", why should I pay a foreign tax to give a tax break to a non-member owning property in the Paha Sapa (Black Hills), or somewhere else in the state of South Dakota? Why should I be paying for its County Commissions? The Rosebud Sioux Tribe does have an agreement with the state of a four percent tax. There is absolutely no agreement on the illegal Gross Receipts and PUC taxes.

The tribe must make a sovereign stand. Pass legislation prohibiting all illegal taxes; those not entered into by contract with foreign entities. Leadership is aware of this issue, but deigns and concedes to state legislation. Swallow our pride. Look the other way.

Seek to start a small business on the Rosebud land you will encounter forms of state jurisdiction. Perhaps the Rosebud Sioux Tribe should rescind the four percent tax collection agreement with the state of South Dakota until the imposition of these illegal taxes ceases. We can collect this tax on our own.

If the "Incidence of Burden" of the taxes is established to be placed, passed on to tribal membership, then we have a legal obligation to pursue litigation. The Oyate, ikce wicasa-wiya, are having a hard enough time as it is. Look to the similarities of the "Pourier Case" in Pine Ridge.

Courts: I firmly believe in our tribal court system. Yes, it needs improvement. Most everything does. We must seek to make our court system a model of what a tribal court system should be. Otherwise, the state and feds will continue to covet and attack our judicial resources. True sovereignty includes control of our own judicial resources.

We are too quick to adapt state measures in our Law and Order Code. Keep I mind, there are 50 states. Why give credence to an entity (South Dakota) which covets what little we have left?

We must make it a long term commitment to return jurisdiction of the so-called "14 Major Crimes Act" to the tribes. I have a piece of legislation that was written by a brilliant native attorney, and he has offered this as the vehicle to be introduced to the American Congress.

The feds completely control the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Police and Court systems. Our people are filling the American state and federal maxa tipila (iron houses), prisons. Many are innocent, many were "railroaded", or were put away on misdemeanors. The victims of crime must be protected, so too, must the native victims of the oppressive state and federal judicial systems.

I plan to write more on these matters which will soon affect all our tiospaye. We cannot allow ourselves to continue to swallow our pride and look the other way.

Rights-of-Way,Easements (1813 Study): There is presently an attempt by powerful utilities companies to have "eminent domain" on rights-of-ways and easements over and across Indian Country.

They (and their powerful allies), approached the American Congress and said they were being taken advantage of by tribes and for Congress to grant them eminent domain over and across tribal lands.

How ludicrous! The arrogance and agreed of the controlling wasicu is amazingly alarming. The Indian is basically altruistic.

We are concerned for the welfare of others, our tiospaye, the Oyate as a whole. These corporations are concerned only about their pocketbooks; the almighty dollar. "in God We Trust." They can't steal enough.

More alarming, Congress conceded and inserted a "Section 1813" in the 2005 Energy Act. This Act directs the DOI and DOE (Depts of Interior and Energy) to do a study on rights-of-ways and easements in Indian Country to see if there is merit to these corporate complaints.

A dedicated tribal member has been delegated to do a thorough study on at least one company doing business here on the Rosebud. We will prove that the Sicangu have been grossly taken advantage of for tona years by utilities companies and the BIA has been an accomplice. We will not swallow our pride and look the other way. In the end, this so-called "Section 1813" study will prove to be to our tribe's advantage. The poorest are economically taken advantage of by the richest. (The American Way?)

Constitutional Convention: I mention this historic process because, the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's constitutional Task Force completed its task 14 months ago and submitted 27 proposed amendments to the DOI (Department of Interior), through the local and area Bureau of Indian Affairs offices. Initially, there were 189 proposed amendments written by visionary Sicangu.

Many saw the IRA form of government as not working for the Oyate.

I am disheartened and saddened that the BIA continues to sit on these proposed amendments. What is further discouraging is that our leadership seems to be in complicity, with some supporting this obstructionism. We should not fear necessary change. Kiksuya! Remember that this change was mandated by the Oyate, by the ikce wicasa-wiya.

I personally think that our sacred hoop will never be rehealed as long as we are governed by an IRA system. We will not be sovereign. We will continue to swallow our pride and we will continue to look the other way. I am also keenly congnizant to the reality that we have to have a degree of faith and hope in elected tribal leadership. I consistently pray for them. I am encouraged when I hear protectors of tribal jurisdiction such as Fern Bordeaux/Boltz speak out. I know there will be future leaders to guide us. Just as honorable, past leaders such as Frank La Point Sr. and Alex Little Soldier, once did. These are our champions and defenders of tribal sovereignty.

If we are to stop the erosion and diminishment of tribal sovereignty, we must make the treaties the foundation of our safeguarding-that, and our spirituality. We must pray for protection. There are enemies of our sacred treaties, from congressmen who would abolish them, to newspaper editorial writers who use smoke signals to belittle them.

I believe the Treaties are sacred because the spirits of our ancestors helped craft them and will continue to guide us, if we only believe.

The U.S. Constitution is not an archaic, historic document. Neither are native treaties.

The American Constitution says Treaties are the supreme law of the land, after all.

I am only one native man. I am not much, but I will not stand for the diminishment and sacrificing of sovereignty.

We natives, one and all, must make a stand of protection.

Otherwise, we will be telling our takoja's (grandchildren) the "myth of tribal sovereignty".

No! Basketball does not end in March

Coaches, volunteers help with skill camps, open gyms, leagues, team camps

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - For many folks, the youth basketball season ends with the Big Foot Conference tourney and BJ Weston and high school and college with the state tournaments and the NCAA tourney but for those interested in improving individual player skills or team chemistry and team results for the coming year, there is a spring tournament season, summer leagues and team camps and individualized lifting, ball handling and shooting work that goes on throughout the year.

"We have set up a busy schedule for both the boys and the girls in the basketball program at Pine Ridge high school," said Tiny DeCory, "Doni and I are taking the girls and the boys to a league in Wall every Wednesday night throughout June and there will be a tournament in early July, we take nine girls and 10-12 boys each week; Jones County, White River, Kadoka, New Underwood and Wall are included."

Pine Ridge girls will be participating in the North American Indigenous Games set for July 2-9 in Denver, Colorado while both the girls and the boys will be competing in the Native American Basketball Invitational July 10-15 in Phoenix. In between the big trips there is a tourney in Lower Brule and a new camp called the Native Elite Basketball Camp sponsored by the Omaha Nation Public Schools on June 23 and 24.

Bill Pourier will return as the boy's basketball at Pine Ridge while one of his assistants, Bill Mendoza will take over as the girl's coach. Shane Warwick, a nationally known trainer, came down to Pine Ridge this spring for a series of development drills with local ball players.

Following NABI in mid July, the Decorys plan a midnight basketball league in Pine Ridge at the YO park with life skills workshops and an award presentation at the end.

Last week Little Wound rehired both coaches from last year, Mary Tobacco for the girls and Jamie Feather Earring for the boys. Tobacco has open gym scheduled from 6-9 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday evenings at the school in Kyle with some team camps and individual skills camps scheduled from mid June until the end of July for the high school ball players..

Matt Rama returns for his fourth year as head boy's coach at Red Cloud and has probably scheduled the most ambitious summer schedule. Rama has been running an individual skills camp each day from 1-3 p.m., Monday through Thursday for third through eighth graders, boys and girls.

Both the varsity and junior varsity high school teams are participating in the summer league at Rapid City Stevens high school that runs through June each Wednesday evening with a tournament the first week of July and includes stiff double AA competition with Stevens, RC Central, Sturgis, Douglas and Spearfish all involved. .

The varsity boys have been to team camps in Denver, Hill City, Aberdeen and McCook, the last four weekends and will finish out the month this weekend at Black Hills State University in Spearfish. With the league and team camps they will probably play over 50 games and each player will be encouraged to attend individual skills camps when possible and to work on their shooting, ball handling and weight training daily.

Christian McGhee, Billy Scott, Bryer Iron Cloud and Henry Crow will all participate in the Indigenous games set for July 2-8 in Denver.

As of yet, Red Cloud has not hired a girl's coach.

Chuck Brewer and Crazy Horse took both their high school boys and junior high boys to a team camp last weekend at South Dakota Tech in Rapid City. Last week Crazy Horse held a youth camp for youth from third through the eighth grade and may possibly go to Black Hills State the last weekend of June. They also have a church basketball camp scheduled for June 19-21 with a tournament on the 22. Crazy Horse is looking for a girl's coach and maybe a boy's coach depending on how much time Brewer has between his athletic director job and his new dean of student's position.

"If you want to be competitive at the end of the season and have a chance of going to state and doing well at state, you have to work during the off season," said both Rama and DeCory, "we have to do a better job of motivating our student athletes to work all year on their skill development, their academic preparation as well as playing games."

Laura Big Crow is preparing for Mayville State in the fall, she said I'm going to be in much better shape than I was when I first went to Williston; Laura played for Pine Ridge in high school, spent the last two years at Williston State tearing up the Mon-Dak conference and now will attend Mayville State,

State University last month and is participating in a college league in Denver for four weeks as well as continuing to lift, work on ball handling and shooting.

Johnny Crow who just graduated from Red Cloud is going to McCook Community College in Nebraska and is in McCook to help his new coach with three basketball camps. He will return next week and get back to work on his weight lifting, shooting and ball handling to get ready for the fall.

Colleges and universities offer both individual skills and team camps throughout June and July while local high schools offer their won skills camps during the summer.

"We encourage our student athletes to take advantage of the skills camps around the area and throughout the state," said Rama and DeCory, "we all enjoy the success of a team that goes far in the post season, it comes down to how much work a student athlete does in the off-season, how much they work on their game with weight lifting, shooting, ball handling and conditioning drills."

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I saw you last year in Rapid City. I have to say, I've been pretty impressed with what you told me.

The main subjects of our conversation was my ex-husband and my children. Lately I've been getting the feeling that he is about to start some problems for me again. Last year, you told me that he would be getting into some kind of trouble and my kids would make their own decision to get him out of their lives.

Do you still seeing this as happening, or am I being paranoid about him starting trouble? I'm worn out mentally and financially from dealing with my ex.

I believe that my life and my kids' lives would be better if he would just leave all of us alone, but I don't want my kids to see me as the bad guy. I don't feel like I can fully get on with my life, until he is out of the picture.

Thanks for your help.
Frustrated!!!

Dear Frustrated:

Some ex's do try to still be the glue in the lives of their ex. They continually badger and continue with patterns of the relationship that they demonstrated during the marriage.

They still act as though they have some "right" to determine the course of the life of their ex.

Your ex is one of those. I do see a time, probably in December or January, where legal trouble so tie up your ex that he will be forced to stay away from you and your children.

In the meantime, please understand that he is not able to control you, or your attitudes, or your life.

In order to better create a life of freedom from this man it is imperative that you learn to feel free from reacting to him:

1. Hang up the phone, you don't need to discuss or justify.

2. Arrange for him to see your children in a neutral location, if you need to, go to court and make this mandatory.

3. Do not discuss him to or with any of his or your family members (gossip creates friction and misunderstanding).

4. Learn neutrality. Feel neutral, consider him "dust in the wind," "noise in the system," and the remonstrations of frustration at not having control over you.

The key word here is found in the word "divorce." Whether you were legally married or not, you are divorced. That means he has no more say so in your life than your next door neighbor. Separate yourself from his value system. He may have an opinion, but unless it has to do directly and logically with the future of your children it has no bearing in your life.

He has an opinion, but he has no rights - and his opinion has no weight or bearing in your life. You truly have to quit communicating with him in a co-dependent manner.

You must really feel that his opinion does not matter to you - once you get there his impact on you becomes minimal. Consider him a stranger...how much impact does a stranger's opinion have in your life?

His threats are only hot air (I will take the kids away from you, etc.). He just knows your fears, but he cannot afford to nor would he really want the responsibility of the children. You continue to entangle yourself with him through emotional response.

Read the book: The Four Agreements, by Don Miguel Ruiz. It will help teach you neutrality in any and all relationships. Your ex has so many problems and abhorrent behaviors that you cannot logically assume that anything he says matters. His temper is so strong that it will land him in jail if not prison. You cannot afford to entangle with him. At the very next sign of trouble place a restraining order on him.

Don't worry about how your children will perceive you for your strength in protecting yourself.

Don't talk badly about him (EVER) in front of them, but do tell them what you have to do because "Daddy isn't able to control his own behavior because he feels bad." To worry about protecting them from his abuse of you is once again, co-dependency. You don't need to protect him at all - you need to protect yourself. Good men do not need to be defended about bad behavior or extreme imbalance in their lives; men that behave badly and are out of control are still responsible for their behavior and relationships and part of their karma or what they get back is the loss of the respect from their families.

Do not foster protection of this man any longer. Your kids are dealing with being the children of an alcoholic and how you manage the truth in their lives can affect their lives and how they handle themselves as adults. It is possible for your children to still love him, accept him, but not want to be like him or even with him.

Dear Anna,

I just wanted to find out about something that has been bothering me for awhile and I wanted to see if you could help. Awhile back my boyfriend went to stay with his family for the weekend and he came back with hickeys on his neck.

He said he was passed out and woke up like that. Now it happened again, now I am starting to wonder? There is a lot more behind this but I'm afraid to give out more information. What do you see?

Happening Again

Dear Happening Again,

Well, everybody but you who reads your letter will know what is going on. It doesn't take a psychic to see this one.

The old "I fell passed out and a bunch of girls jumped me and gave me hickeys" is the stupidist of all excuses. Why was he drinking and partying? Who needs it? Why would you put up with it? My advice is dump his butt... a twice unfaithful boyfriend would lead to multiple times being an unfaithful husband. That is why we date - to figure out if it will work - and this relationship won't work because he has earned your distrust.

The good news is that by Christmas time or so you will have a really nice guy in your life. Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I have a question? I would like to know what and how if I could get this guy back. Long story short. I was married and I really liked this younger man, and he kept coming to where I worked and it was hard for me to control it.

I wanted to be with him and the more I pushed myself away from him I hurt inside to be near him. I had three girls and married. I loved my husband but I just wanted to be with this other person just to know if it was true feelings that I had or what.

Well I wanted him so bad I told a couple of friends at work about him coming on to me and word got back to him and he came to my office and told me to stop the lies I have told about him that he didn't like me and he was just coming to the worksite to see his aunt and her friend, which he ended up going out with. I just made him not look at me any more you know and to this day they are still together and he's always smiling at her and the love I see that they share, but I still feel that he owes me; he made me like him and I fell for him, all he ever said to me was hi, you look nice today, and if he was looking for his aunt. This girl he is with now is my sister in law, and her family just wants her to start seeing other people but he's the only one she sees and I am just waiting for my chance to get to him. I even went out with this guy who she really hung out with, he came back from another country to make her jealous but that didn't work.

She didn't care if I was with him or not.... Will my sister in law leave him one day or what?

Will I find true love or someone? I am not with my husband anymore he is out of state but he helps, he sends me money for our girls. I am glad that he isn't seeing anyone at this time so is there a chance of us getting back together..... me and my ex husband?

Chance for me

Dear Chance:

Okay girl, the word is obsession. First of all this other guy didn't make you feel anyway - you determine how you feel, not anybody else. If a man just says hi, or even mildly flirts with you, and you interpret that as something more, then the something more is in your head and not real.

You have the feeling of being incomplete without a man in your life and unfortunately your fantasies consume and dominate your life.

The trouble within you however is that even when you have a man in your life you find that it is someone else that you want. That is searching on the "outside of self" to complete self. Spend some time on self growth.

To try and break up sister's in law relationship is so basically wrong that I don't even know what to say to you except to get counseling with a professional.

Counseling will help you greatly to learn to become whole all by yourself, so that you can be whole with another. Your ex husband will be open to having you back in his life as a partner in a few years, after you figure out what is really important in life. Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

I am all confused and don't know what to do, I went to court with my kid's dad for child support and I wanted him to help me. He did for awhile then his girlfriend got mad so he quit again.

So now we are going to court again, I just don't know what to do anymore. I know I stayed with him first and I left him because I didn't want to drink. The woman he's with and him have kids too. It doesn't matter if she marries him and kills me over him. She doesn't have to be jealous all the time when she sees our kids. My kids know that she doesn't like them. I told them just don't mind her and ignore her so they do.

All I want is for him to help me out but this is getting ridiculous and now the kids are not allowed to talk to their aunties and uncles so I told them never mind anyone, their aunties and uncles said you guys can come over anytime and don't pay attention to her.

Confused and don't know what to do

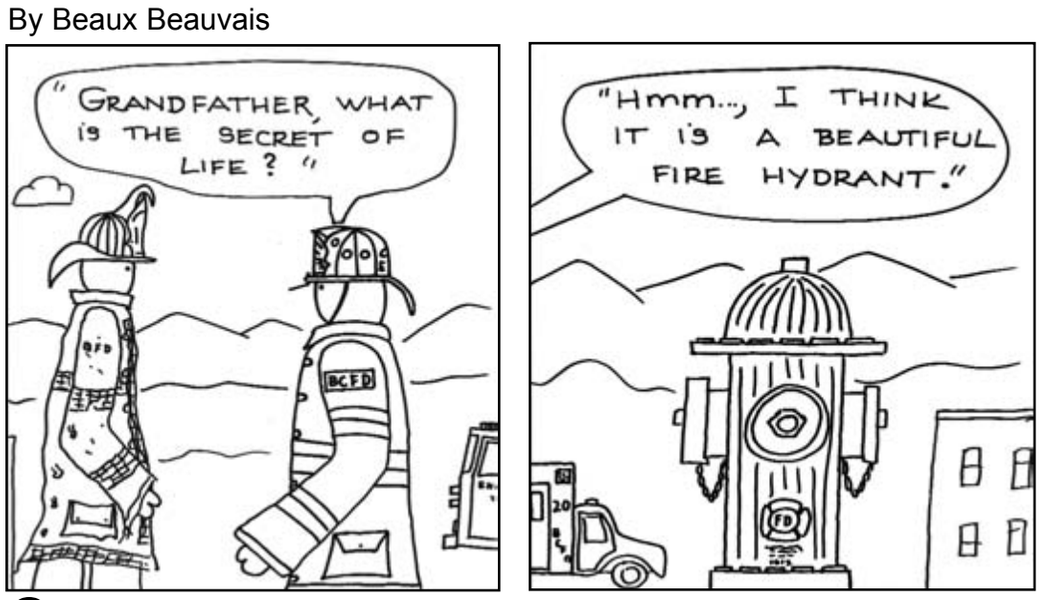
Dear Confused:

You're really doing okay. Let the courts handle the support issue, so get a good attorney or let the state or the tribe handle him. In the meantime, understand that you cannot depend on his money and try to figure out how to improve your life and become a good supporter of your children - all by yourself.

Go to school (actually, I see that you are going to do that). Work hard, pay your own bills, become proud of your ability to provide for your children. Don't worry about his aunties and uncles - they really do see pretty much the same things that you see about your ex's mate. They will not (with the exception of one auntie) punish your children because the relationship between you and your ex didn't work.

This blame stuff is too prevalent everywhere and some families love to take sides in break-ups, but the issues become finally too large and the number of break-ups too many to continually get involved in who is right or who is wrong. Most of your ex's relatives understand that.

Good luck, use your experience to encourage other young women to go to school first, get a job second, and learn to be the one that provides the money before they have a baby and try to get a man to support them. Practicality helps in achieving balance. I'm not saying you can't do both anyway, but it's a lot harder to get your life together after having children than it is before you have them. Also tell them their children deserve better.



I see you becoming a counselor and working with children - bless you on your journey

RST passes motion for Thune to take a stand against desecration

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

Sen. John Thune Robert Moore

ROSEBUD - During the Rosebud Sioux Tribal council meeting on June 22, Robert Moore, Antelope District 3 council representative, made a motion to request Senator John Thune to issue a statement calling for the end to any construction, bars, and other enterprises and to call for the protection of the sacred area surrounding Bear Butte. And, to halt the desecration of the land. The motion was seconded by Scott Herman, also of Antelope community.

Moore added, "It is amazing that what can happen when the South Dakota delegation joins forces. My hope is that with this motion, Senator Thune will assume some leadership within the delegation to raise the national level of awareness of this assault on sacred site that is really occurring all over the United States. It worked to preserve Ellsworth Airforce Base at a significant cost to the state and the federal budget. It is heart

Blockade of Whiteclay beer sales set to go

WHITECLAY, NEB - The blockade to curb the transportation of beer that is purchased in Whiteclay and illegally taken on to the Pine Ridge reservation is apparently set to go. Duane Martin, Sr. of the Strong Heart Civil Rights group said that all the related issues have been discussed and preparations have been made to set up the blockade beginning with a meeting at Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge at 10 a.m. on Wednesday, June 28.

Much of the beer that is sold at Whiteclay often is transported north to the Pine Ridge reservation and organizers of the blockade will stop each car to check for beer and confiscate it if found. The Oglala Sioux tribal council is supportive of the blockade; however, OST tribal police will only be there to keep civil order.

Mark Vasina, President of Nebraskans for Peace was en route to Pine Ridge and would be arriving this afternoon. Vasina said he had heard from a reporter that the South Dakota Highway Patrol would be present; however, he was not sure what their specific role would be. Vasina has made a commitment to remain at the blockade site for a significant amount of time. He has been facilitating the role

Gordon packing plant grand opening June 29

GORDON - Thursday, June 29, Local Pride Kosher Packing Plant in Gordon, NE will be holding it's grand opening with a free kosher barbeque open to the public.

Local Pride has been met with mixed feelings over the past several years on the Pine Ridge reservation. In spite of the controversy that surrounded this project's designation of being an OOW Empowerment Zone, (EZ), because it was location adjacent rather than within the boundaries of the Pine Ridge Reservation, the plant has successfully become fully operational.

Thanks to the tenacity of the local EZ board of directors, breaking that the offenders of this assault, Jay Allen and the Meade County Commissioners chose revenue over people. That is the bottom line for them."

The motion was approved by the council 14 in favor, 0 opposed, and 3 not voting. RST council representative, Russell Eagle Bear, added to the discussion when he said, "The senators need to know they pass a lot of laws. One is the protection of sacred sites. But, at Bear Butte, they are defying their own laws. Come out with a strong statement and remind the senators to start abiding by them. We need to talk about issues. We are the only tribal people who can be tried in two different courts. That is double jeopardy."

Council representative, Eagle Bear, continued, "They only come around when they want the Native vote. Senator Thune doesn't have to worry about that for awhile, however."

They made the motion during a brief visit by Lila Mehlhaff, based in Thune's Rapid City office stopped by for a brief introduction.

The council session was carried live for Sicangu tribal members over KINI FM.

Rueben McCloskey of the RST Fair powwow committee extended an invitation to Senator Thune and the rest of the state's congressional delegation to be at the annual Rosebud Fair in August. Antelope council representatives, Cyril "Whitey" Scott and Robert Moore also invited Senator Thune to the Antelope powwow on July 7.

Moore also extended an invitation to the RST administration and council to ride in the Antelope powwow parade.

In recent months, Bear Butte International Alliance and other activists have made their opposition known to any kind of 'biker bar' and open air concert venues so close to the mountain which is held sacred to Lakota people. The Meade County Commissioners have also been central players in the whole dispute as they have approved liquor licenses to Jay Allen for his 'biker bar' which he is likely preparing for opening in time for the Sturgis Rally.

Lakota people have also lobbied the state's legislature, to no avail, to establish a "buffer zone" around Bear Butte; however they have not been successful. Carter Camp, Charmaine White Face and others have been rather articulate in expressing the Lakota world view of the inherent sacredness of such historic landmarks. Bear Butte International Alliance has also collected signatures to force the people of Meade County to decide on related development issues so close to Bear Butte as such development is also proving to be an intrusion on wildlife and ranchers in the area. Many local residents also are opposed to over developing the Black Hills.

Local Sicangu tribal member and former RST tribal council representative, Darrell Markus, said at one Meade County Commission tensions were very high as people along the protest march route in Sturgis were quite rude.

He said sheriff's deputies inside of the courthouse were fully armed and were postured in a manner which indicated a possible confrontation.

of Nebraskans for Peace by coordinating his efforts with Martin.

Martin commented on the possible presence of the Highway Patrol officers; translated from Lakota into English, he said, "If they help us that will be good. They are aware of the treaties that we are standing upon."

At issue is the fact that some 12,000 can of beer are reportedly sold at four stores in Whiteclay and most of that is sold to Oglala Sioux tribal members. Activists rallied last March to oppose to automatic renewal of liquor licenses to three stores in Rushville, while the Sheridan County commissioners later granted the automatic renewal. The Nebraska Supreme Court also granted a liquor license to a store which had been denied earlier because of an apparent liquor law violation.

The disproportionate sale of beer to Lakota people is causing a strain on the legal and social environment on the Pine Ridge reservation, as law enforcement officials respond to alcohol related infractions and alcohol treatment options for offenders is an expensive and increasing concern.

OLC 33rd annual graduation

OLC's graduating class as they listen to Herseth. Below: Charles Comes Killing, one of three students who recieved an associate in television prouduction.

Justina Setalla-One Horn, Robert Cook, Gina Bettelyounn, Wayne Fox, Scott Herman, Victoria Sherman, and Gerald and Theresa Lessert were awarded graduate degree in Lakota Leadership and Management.

Herseth told the graduates, "When I look at this list, I see an institution an entire graduating class that is deeply concerned about their community. You are concerned about unemployment, poverty, health care, education, and preserving and promoting Lakota culture and spirituality. As individuals you have prepared yourselves to become educators, business leaders, health care professionals, small business owners and important roles for the years ahead. You will all use what you have learned during your time here to make significant changes within you communities."

Herseth continued, "I'm particularly fond of this year's graduation theme: "Embracing the teachings of our ancestors as we learn new ways." Just as the skills you have learned demonstrate a commitment to developing and improving your communities, this theme is additional evidence of your desire to move forward and achieve great things. And at the same time, it points to an important touchstone - the teachings of your ancestors."

OLC President, Thomas Shortbull, served as the Master of Ceremonies, while John Around Him sang the Lakota flag song and gave a prayer for the graduates in Lakota. Along with Representatives keynote address, SGU President Lionel Bordeaux also addressed the commencement gathering.

The graduates were presented by Dr. Gerald Geraud, the OLC vice president, while Sarah Danner, the director of the OLC nursing program did the capping and pinning of nursing students. In addition, Hornbeck noted the degrees which will awarded to OLC students for the very first time; a bachelors degree in K-12 Lakota Studies Education was awarded to Susana Geligna, and the first associate of applied science degrees in television production were awarded to Charles Comes Killing, Tony Brave and Amber Rose Montileaux. Ronald Ten Fingers scored in the top 15 percent on the national teacher examination.

As Herseth pointed to many local entrepreneurial successes, such as the Lakota Funds and the Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort, she said, "These success stories are just a few of many, but they demonstrate very clearly the economic potential of Indian Country and native American entrepreneurs. In spite of all the obstacles, and the need to secure greater financial resources to facilitate more economic growth, tribal governments, individuals and organizations are creating and fostering successful business ventures. And, today's graduates stand "tall and strong" - and poised to contribute to the growth that is already underway."

Local Pride granding opening

Executive Director Tally Plume, the Rubashkin family and local plant manager Gary Ruse, more than 90 jobs have been created through Local Pride Processing. Of those 65 percent of the current employees are Native American, 15 percent Hispanic and the remaining 20 percent are Caucasian.

More than 100 head of cattle are being processed five days a week at the Gordon Local Pride plant. All processing is kosher, meaning Jewish law sanctions the process. All meat is shipped as boxed beef or swinging beef to the parent company, Agra-Processing, located in Postville, Iowa. From there distribution takes place all over the world.

"We recently opened our boning and packing departments, making the plant fully operational." says Gary Ruse, manager, "We wanted to wait to have the grand opening until all phases of the project were complete."

He said the public is invited to join in the celebration of this boost to our local economies.

The free kosher barbeque will begin at 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., Thursday June 29, under the tent at the plant in Gordon, Neb. Special guests will include the Governor of Nebraska Dave Heinemann, OOW Empowerment Zone officials and other special guests.

Spirituality is our culture and walking with the teachings of the White Buffalo Calf Woman

BY CECELIA FIRE THUNDER
Oglala Sioux Tribe President

PINE RIDGE - We are reminded of the Sacredness of the White Buffalo Calf Woman and her arrival as a buffalo and then becoming a woman. She brought to us the sacred bundle and seven sacred rites upon which we base our entire culture. She came to us a beautiful woman, virtuous and bringing us hope for the future.

Two men came upon her, the first seen her beauty and knew instantly that she was a spiritual and sacred being. The second man when he looked at her was filled with immoral and lustful thoughts. He was then turned into a pile of bones. The other man then prayed. He welcomed her and went to tell the people and prepare the camp where she would come to begin her teachings.

Here is the first teaching, the foundation of respect for the Lakota women who carry the future. The value of keeping this teaching true to our hearts when we take part in our cultural ceremonies is being mindful of the sacredness of women and having respect for first and foremost, ourselves, then everything and everyone around us.

If we were being respectful of one another and practicing virtuosity, holding our sexual relations sacred, "planned parenthood" would never have been a topic of discussion at this level. Protecting our people from sexual violence should be a priority. Our first responsibility of creating a strong future for our people is the creation of a sacred womb free of violence, drugs and alcohol.

The majority of our women who are battered have been or will be raped. The ultimate end to being assaulted is rape. Our women, men, children and elders of our nation who have been sexually assaulted are stripped of their essence of being, and begin to lose a part of who they are, and their spirit begins to die, the most important part of living. We need to invest in our future of having healthy mothers, fathers and children.

We remember today the reason why we are here and where we need to be. Our women are no longer being honored and respected the way they deserve. We have very high rates of drug and alcohol abuse, violence in our communities, our children being abused physically, sexually, emotionally and mentally. We have high rates of incest amongst blood relatives. This is wrong. There is no way to excuse this toxic behavior. But there are ways to capture the spirit and offer our help and do something to build and empower our hurt children and women to function and bring back the health and wellness for a stronger future.

We are at a crossroads of "healing." Our people are hurting, been traumatized as children and then as women. It is not enough to say this way of being is not traditional, cultural or spiritual. We have heard the same comment from different men, which is, they as men, don't wear panties or bras, and therefore, don't go to women ceremonies, which translates into a woman's choice is her own business. A comment was thrown out on the council floor from protestors that they don't even care about abortion and just want the president removed. It is time to put a stop to this radical behavior of intimidation and threats and time for the leaders of our people to focus on strategies for empowering our people.

Strengthening our law enforcement system, increasing services provided through health care, and bringing resources to empower our communities to build a better economy

We have been brought out of a downward financial spiral, which accumulated well over the past seven years. The work has just begun and we are finally making progress. It is time to strengthen responsibility for ourselves, for our families, communities and tribal nation. Today our future is at stake and the teachings of the White Buffalo Calf Woman need to be incorporated in every area of day-to-day living.

RST joins lawsuit against closing BIA education line offices

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The RST council met in session on Thursday, June 22 and entertained a resolution by District 3, Antelope council representative, Scott Herman, to join the suit filed by the Yankton Sioux Tribe, the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, the Oglala Sioux Tribe, the Flandreau Sioux Tribe, the Lower Brule Sioux Tribe and the Turtle Mountain Chippewa against the Office of Indian Education Programs of the BIA.

Last Wednesday, several South Dakota and North Dakota tribes filed a suit in U.S. District court in Sioux Falls seeking an injunction against OIEP to prevent a planned realignment of the education line offices which presently serve several reservations.

The reorganization plan would affectively close the six administrative offices now located on reservations and open line offices in Pierre, Rapid City, and Minot, ND. The line offices would be located miles from the 35 BIA and tribal schools which they presently serve. Current BIA staff would be terminated at the six offices, while those opposed to the plan are concerned about the costly price tag.

Apparently, the BIA is concerned that some 66 percent of students attending BIA schools are not making adequate yearly progress (AYP) as required by the No Child Left Behind legislation. The original plan is to improve educational management of the educational process, while schools and students in the Dakotas will be required to be more accountable for their performance.

Nationwide, there are several such BIA education line offices which are responsible for the educational management of respective tribes. If the suit is successful it would require more consultation with the tribes from the Great Plains region who would be affected, while forcing the BIA to comply with all regulations and keeping the six original line offices open.

RST resolution number 06-153 was passed by a vote of 15 in favor, 0 opposed and 3 not voting. The resolution as written noted, "Whereas, the tribes listed above have joined together in seeking to file a complaint for injunctive relief against the BIA to compel the BIA to keep open and maintain at present levels of operation and maintain the present levels of operation and services, to retain education personnel located throughout North and South Dakota in place and continuing to provide assistance to the plaintiff Indian tribes, until such time as the BIA has complied with their obligations pursuant to federal law, regulations, and policy, and to enter into meaningful predecisional consultation with the effected tribes and school."

Some of the affected Lakota tribes in South Dakota have commented that the large sum of money earmarked for the planned reorganization of the line offices would be better utilized if it were used directly for educational services to students.

Our Views

Family literacy needs to be a bigger part of our communities

As many times as we stand in line at our local C-store on the 'rez' waiting to check out, it often occurs to one that our local stores don't often carry a lot of reading material for families. If there is any, the most you see is the local papers and Hollywood tabloids and weekly gossip news. You don't see much literature that could be in the family literacy category.

We call such newsworthy print "family literacy" material and it includes anything that is meant to promote reading, discussion and update parents on the volumes of information that are impacting their child, locally and nationally. We feel that Lakota parents are deserving of such access to the kind of information that originates directly from their schools, community, and tribe and which promote a healthy, nurturing, and viable lifestyle where students are positively supported in their quest for knowledge.

So much information is out there and by the nature of changing circumstances and the passing of time, parents need to be provided with timely information that is current and accurate and relevant to their young ones.

So many Lakota communities do not have public libraries where the youth can do their research and quiet studying and the parents might pick up a newspaper or some relevant publication that might pique their interest. Most of our students can get that on Internet, if one has Internet but there isn't a whole lot of reservation families that have Internet in their homes. It is way for schools, teachers, health care and social workers and others to communicate information to parents and guardians in an efficient way and such library outlets are vital links. A library should be a place that is known to welcome parents and children and the discovery of information and exposure to ideas is the objective.

So many of our children have shown that their reading scores as documented under the No Child Left Behind are negligible and "family literacy" has to be a broad topic area that many literacy resources can fall under. There are many approaches to teaching a child to read and depending upon the readiness of a child a parent simply has to discover what techniques are best suited. Unless there is a visual or emotional issue that is inhibiting a child's reading aptitude, there really is no secret for attaching sounds to letters and connecting those into words and then, making longer sentences that are associated with certain meaning.

The Lakota language is the very same way, in that most Lakota words can be broken down into several parts and each one literally means something. That is not always the case with English, and that makes Lakota an even more attractive reason to study.

Family literacy then should be something that we need to pay attention to as our children need all the encouragement and resources they can access. We need to make information available to parents whether they are simply checking out at the C-store, doing their laundry, or visiting our local libraries and schools.

Our schools stress reading scores, encourage higher reading scores but yet our families don't have much access to family reading … even in their local convenience stores. Hats off to the local reservation stores that take the time and money to sell magazines, books and other family literature on their shelves.

Things to empower yourself

Revenge is an ugly word and results in harm

By Patty Pourier

We used to play a game called "Dirty Marbles." It is also known as SH_T on your neighbor or Aggravation. Most of you probably know the game I am talking about. It is marketed as "a game of sweet revenge."

The game has a lesson to it. It is that you cannot trust your fellow players. And that if they knock you off the board, one will wait until the next opportunity to take revenge and knock them off the board, thus known as "the game of sweet revenge."

Have any of you been playing this game in real life?

It doesn't feel very good to have your neighbor SH_T on you when playing the game.

And it feels even worse when it happens in real life.

My natural, instinctive reaction is to treat others like they treated me. I want "sweet" revenge. But, through time, I have learned, there is no such thing as "sweet" revenge. Revenge is an ugly word, a negative action, and results in harm to others and myself. So why would I think of this adverse reaction to others?

I have been trying to teach my takojas the golden rule. We have it written on the refrigerator and when they spend the night we read it together at the breakfast table. "Treat others like you would like to be treated."

This is the very opposite of the "game of sweet revenge".

I continue to have opportunities to make the choice of treating others with sweet revenge or as I would like to be treated.

I have had the opportunity to think about the choices I make and why.

Most of the time one of the following has happened I am hurt, I didn't get my way, my ego has been damaged, someone has said something about me that simply is not true, or I have resorted to an old behavior learned at a young age to survive in a dysfunctional family.

None of these justify trying to get revenge.

I have come up with an acronym to try to identify my feelings when they come up. It is- H-E-L-D, H-hurt- E-Ego - L-Lie- D-Dysfunction.

H-E-L-D is a good way for me to test to see if I have HELD on to revenge in my reaction.

Recently, a person who I thought was a friend, seemed to covertly "SH_T on his neighbor" (the neighbor being me).

I had to stop before reacting and try to figure out "why do I feel like I got punched in the stomach after reading his e-mail."

Why would he covertly seem to be taking these actions? What part do I have in this situation (if any)? And if not, will my reaction be part of the problem that is seemingly being created or part of a positive solution.

I had to STOP and THINK before reacting.

After applying "H-E-L-D", I realized I was hurt and he was reacting with ego and dysfunctional co-dependency.

The choice I made, after thought, was to simply not react, but to ask for more information.

He appeared to be acting from his own personal history of experiences, as all of us do.

I tried to understand his issues without taking his inventory. And to react adversely, in any way would not help but hurt the situation.

So my choice was to let it go, and ask more questions, to make sure I understood what was going on without negative emotions getting involved.

I thought he might be having a problem with co-dependency, by trying to take care of others, and I did not have to enter into his conflict.

The family of Dakota Garnier asking the Oyate for moral support

Dear Editor:

The family of Dakota Garnier are asking the Lakota oyate to show up on his court dates, especially when his jury trial starts on Aug. 16 to 18 at 8:15 a.m.

We would like the Lakota oyate to come and sit with us in the court room for moral support.

In a recent Hot Springs Star article it states, "A 19 year old Pine Ridge man appeared in Circuit Court in Hot Springs for a motion hearing with his attorney Greg Sperlich on June 9. Dakota Garnier was arraigned on April 4 and May 18 on seven counts stemming from a Hot Springs street fight involving two groups of young people on June 2.

"At the motion hearing, defense attorney Sperlich presented the following preliminary set of motions which were approved by the States Attorney Lance Russell and Judge Thomas Trimble: motion for designation of expert witnesses, motion for criminal histories, motion for street clothes (defendant will be allowed to wear street clothes during the trial), motion regarding physical restraints on defendant (defendant will wear a monitoring belt during the trial), motion for a witness list, motion for an evidence list, motion for production of reports, statements video tapes or recording with regard to photographic lineup. Motions that were questioned included motion to require notice of Rule 404(b) evidence, motion to specify 609A evidence, and motion for jury questionaire.

"Judge Trimble set Thursday, June 29 at 9 a.m. to discuss these motions. Other court dates set are Thursday, July 13 at 11:30 a.m. to hear witnesses, and the trial by jury for August 16, 17 and 18 with court to start at 8:15 a.m.

"Garnier is charged with one count of attempted first degree murder and one count of aggravated assault for severely beating Matthew Pepin, then 18 of Hot Springs. The five additonal charges against Garnier are aggravated assault, a class 3 felony; a class 3 felony (victim Dustin Dillon) aggravated riot, a count 4 felony (weapon baseball bat). The maxiumum penalty for all charges is 70 years in prison and $70,000 fine. Garnier has pled not guilty to all counts.

"Garnier and his brother Dirk, 20, also of Pine Ridge allegedly fled the scene to the Pine Ridge reservation to avoid prosecution in state court.

"The brothers are accused of severely beating Matthew Pepin by hitting him with a baseball bat and kicking him after he fell to the ground.

"It is still believed Dirk Garnier is still on the reservation to prevent his arrest in this matter.

"Garnier was arrested on March 31 when he went to a medical clinic in Rapid City for treatment for a broken leg. Garnier is being held in the Fall River County jail without bond."

Explanation of Arapaho sundance conflict on June 8

Dear Editor,

Because of the recent events and the lies to the media and the people, I would like to make my own public statement about the June 8 Arapaho Conflict.

I have the responsibility of "wearing two hats". Yes, I am the District A-l Legislator for the Cheyenne-Arapaho Tribes.

But before that, during, and long after, I am a ceremonial man. As a ceremonial man I have easily chosen to defend the Sacred Ways of our Arapaho people Sacred Ways that our ancestors fought and sacrificed their lives for.

Are we any less Arapaho today? And if we are, who or what has made us that way? Are we to be Arapaho only by words, or do we see that Tradition is what gives meaning to being Arapaho?

I stand behind what it means to be Arapaho. As a ceremonial man, I chose to be personally involved in the June 8 Arapaho Conflict.

There was no chief that led us on June 8. We were all leaders who acted together on that day. All our men acted together as warriors defending our ways and our People and for that I thank them. Our elders and women gave support and for that I thank them.

This June 8 Arapaho Conflict didn't happen overnight. There's been years of efforts on our part to resolve this in a good and peaceful way.

For years the Chiefs spoke, the Ceremonial Leaders spoke, the People spoke and yet these others and our tribal leaders ignored the Resolutions and the Court Orders. The BIA said they would help but they didn't. No one listened to us, the people.

On that day our traditional people gathered together to pray before we went into that camp.

We prayed for no violence and for no harm to come to anyone. We went in with no weapons.

It was the women, young and old, from that camp who came at us with shovels, hoes, and whatever else. Their leaders ran off.

Northern Perspectives

It is summer time on the Rosebud

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

On the Rosebud, our twenty traditional communities are busily working at organizing and sponsoring their respective powwows.

They are generally small, intimate gatherings during which a small number of dancers and singers are trying out their latest dance steps or practicing a new song.

The Lakota way is to observe, quietly practice, and then put into practice what you have learned.

It is a rather simple 'construct' or concept that teachers, perhaps, should pay attention to. It is something that teachers call "modeling" and I sincerely think that much more modeling must go on in order for student to understand what is required of them.

The U.S. military has it down pat as they allow a lot of on the job training as way to gain aptitude in a lot of occupational specialties and everything is not geared to pre-testing and post-testing.

They say even medical doctors are given a second, third and even a fourth chance to pass a test of mastery and maybe our students should be extended the same option.

It is a lot of fun on the Rosebud as the atmosphere and attitudes are very relaxed and time seems to slip by ever so slowly.

The Ring Thunder powwow a couple of weeks ago was a lot of fun despite a small number of dancers. I had the pleasure of singing a couple of songs with Francis Cutt and the Mato Gleska singers from Corn Creek and that was fun. Their lead singer was a young man probably in his late teens or early twenties and it was nice to see young people taking part.

In my community of Antelope, the arbor is being totally replaced with a new structure and hopefully that will increase the attendance as it is usually smaller than anticipated also. Glen Yellow Eagle, Dixie Larvie, Lisa Beauvais, and Brian and Barb Herman apparently have put in a lot of work in making preparations for July 7.

Miss SGU, Michael Garnieux is also a part of the powwow committee. Brian has apparently been mowing the grass in and around the arbor and it looks great.

The Antelope powwow grounds are located no far my late brother, Harvey's, Sioux 400 housing unit and I will be thinking of him as we attend this year. I kept forgetting that our family is in mourning and we shouldn't be enjoying ourselves so much. He must have lived there since the late 1960s and he had to have heard the powwow going on all those years.

He was not a powwow goer, but enjoyed being around cars, working on satellite dishes and watching sports.

Dancers will converge from every tiospaye on the 'rez' as things build up toward the annual Rosebud Fair. Singers will make new drum sticks and make sure that the sacred drum is well kept by one of the group.

The Rosebud Fair is a joyful time as people of all ages will give thanks that we all made it to another year and that the new school year will bring a promise of new insights, friends, and aspirations.

There already have been a couple of sun dances held on the Rosebud and although I did not have the honor of attending, I want to be a part of many others that occur. We hope to be at John Around Him's sun dance next month, as well as many others here on the Rosebud.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Notes From Indian Country

Humiliating the Nation of Islam

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

A terrible thing happened to two soldiers of the 101st Airborne 12 miles south of Baghdad last week.

Pfc. Kristian Menchaca, 23, of Houston and Pfc. Thomas Tucker, 25, Madras, Ore., were tortured and killed by an al-Qaida insurgency group after they were kidnapped during a shootout.

Any human being with an ounce of compassion finds this mindless act to be unforgivable. Perhaps it is impossible for most Americans to understand why such a thing could have happened. But it is not too hard for the Iraqi people to understand. Let's try to go into the mind of an Iraqi man.

In America we have a very short attention span. What happened even six months ago is old news and already forgotten. Not so with people of the Muslim faith. The warring between the different factions, the Shiites, Kurds and Sunni, goes back centuries. The differences continue today because of those very long memories.

Most Americans have nearly forgotten Abu Graib, the infamous prison in Baghdad. The Iraqi people have not, especially the Iraqi male. America was alerted to this horrendous situation when an article by Seymour Hersh appeared in the New Yorker Magazine describing it. CBS News then released the photos and the story on its Evening News and it grew from there.

The images of Iraqi men standing nude with bags over their heads or piled into naked pyramids was utterly humiliating to the Iraqi men. And the fact that white American women were pointing fingers at their nudity and laughing was an outrage to all Iraqi citizens, but much more so for the men.

It didn't matter to them if only one American soldier committed these acts of embarrassment and torture and for President George W. Bush to say publicly that it was only a few bad apples responsible for these acts shows a marked ignorance of the Muslim faith.

The soldiers committing these atrocious acts were Americans and Iraqi men, in their humiliation and anger, did not distinguish between their rank or gender. They did not see just a "handful" of perpetrators. They saw the evil in all American soldiers. The most disgusting acts that could be dreamed up by a conquering army to humiliate a defeated people had just occurred at Abu Ghraib.

To the Iraqi people it was like watching an American soldier pour salt into an open and bleeding wound. It was as bad or worse than raping an Iraqi mother in front of her husband and children. How many American soldiers participated in these acts was not important to the average Iraqi. If one is guilty all are guilty and that is the way it played out to them.

An eye for an eye is taken much more seriously in some countries. Even more so in Muslim nations that have been at war for hundreds of years over such vile acts. Memories are long in the Middle East and vengeance can sometimes wait for 50 years or more before perceived justice is extracted.

An American should know the Koran and try to understand that all people on this planet do not think as Americans think nor act like Americans act. Hadn't they noticed that the devout Muslim women covered themselves from the top of their heads to their feet? Didn't that give them a clue that the body is sacred?

Now recall those pictures of Iraqi men standing naked while white American men women laughed and joked about their nudity. Could this have been worse or equal to forcing them to eat pork?

By no means am I trying to make excuses for the way Menchaca and Tucker were tortured and killed. I merely want to point out the underlying hatred and unvarnished anger that still permeates the minds of so many Iraqi men and women. Revenge no matter how horrible is justifiable in the minds of those seeking it.

Senators like John McCain warned that if the treatment of enemy prisoners did not improve and if the United States did not start to abide by the rules of the Geneva Convention, captured American soldiers could be treated in the same fashion or worse.

The Iraqi people do not fear life and they certainly do not fear death. This is a concept that is not easily grasped by the Western mind. For more than 400 years the settlers and later the United States Army fought Native Americans and they were continuously amazed at the total lack of fear shown by the Indian warriors. It was the complete disregard of death that made the Indians such brave and ferocious fighters.

The American army is considered the invader and no matter the reasons for being in Iraq, they are still the enemy and so many of the mindless and humiliating actions carried out against the Iraqi population by that army have become battle cries of hatred and revenge by the Nation of Islam.

Abu Ghraib was an embarrassment to America, but it was a case of total humiliation and degradation to not only the Iraqi people, but to all Muslims throughout the Middle East. By desecrating the bodies of the Iraqi prisoners, the American soldiers spit on the Sacred Scriptures of Islam. And while the terrible photos of the Iraqi prisoners disappeared from the screens of American television, they played over and over on Arab television.

When the insurgents posted the news of the deaths of the two Americans on the Internet, they were referred to as "crusaders." This word means little to most Americans but it means everything to Islam.

Arapaho conflict

Their men stood behind the women. We had 40, maybe 50 people who went in with no intent to hurt anyone.

No, there was no BIA officer that was hurt. Just a complex security officer who shouldn't have been there in the first place.

No, there was no one stabbed. Yes, we tore down that sundance lodge and that tipi used for a rabbit lodge. Why? Because under Traditional Law what they are doing is wrong.

I liked what one of our relatives said at the Public Hearing on June 9. He spoke about the struggle of our people and many people from other tribes to protect Bear Butte from a biker bar that wants to open close by.

Bear Butte is home to us for Sacred Ceremony. And yet an Arapaho Sacred Sun Dance would be put up close to our own casino?

Me, I ask what kind of leadership would do this to his people? What kind of chief doesn't live among his own people? What kind of chief divides the people? What kind of chief ignores our Traditional Law and convinces people to follow "him."

What kind of chief Leads people to a ceremony that he himself is not a part of? What kind of chief says he's trying to bring good to the people and yet intentionally does things in a way that brings conflict, confusion, and harm to the people?

These so-called leaders and chiefs would have their people believe that it's a hardship to go to Wyoming and they want to change that. And yet they took $500 each from the tribe and one got $1,000. A chief helps the people, yes. But out of his own pocket, and not someone else's. And where is the sacrifice for them that goes with these ways?

They live close by and they have good paying jobs. What kind of person would want to follow this kind of thinking from their leaders?

As a ceremonial man, and not as a legislator, I want to say this: To those tribal leaders, program directors, complex security, and all others who by neglect of duty or misguided conduct contributed, by their own action or inaction, to the June 8 Arapaho Conflict, we THANK YOU.

From your ineffectiveness as leaders you've shown us that we can come together as Traditional People. We can stand up and speak out.

The lies to the media and to the people will only make our numbers grow. There are many good Arapaho people who will want to know the truth and will choose to stand with it.

There are those that look at me as the cause of all this instead of looking at themselves first. They want to send me and others to jail. Am I threatened by this? No. Will it change where I stand? No. And why want to send me and others to jail?

We didn't violate any 'Resolution. We didn't violate any Court Orders. Our leaders are confused about who should be arrested. There are those who want to cry out about Freedom of Religion. But they forget that's white-man law.

WE ARE ARAPAHO! Traditional Law, Spiritual Law was here first. Its these laws that teach us to have one heart. You can't follow white-man laws in these matters and call yourself traditional at the same time.

Some woman from that camp told reporters that they were just "practicing" their religion.

This is how little they know. We Traditional People know that Sun Dance is a Way Of Life every day of life. Its not what you go to and "practice". Its what you live. Maybe those over there would want to come over here and learn real tradition, real ceremony.

We as Indian people all across this land have lost so much, by force, these past 150 years.

If we, as Arapaho, don't make a stand now for what is left then what will there be for the future generations? This modern world has made us pitiful people, but we still have a voice.

And until our voice is heard this struggle will not be over.

Shigellosis cases increase, 87 percent American Indian

PIERRE – South Dakota has reported 54 cases of shigellosis so far in 2006, with 24 of those cases coming since June 1. A total of 131 cases were reported for all of 2005.

"Shigellosis is a fairly common bacterial disease affecting the intestinal tract. The single most important preventive measure for shigellosis is careful hand-washing after using the toilet," said Dr. Lon Kightlinger, State Epidemiologist for the South Dakota Department of Health.

Dr. Kightlinger said the majority of recent cases have been in south central South Dakota in the counties of Todd, Tripp, Bennett, Shannon, Gregory, Charles Mix and Mellette. Most of the cases have been children in day care and their families.

The median age of the cases is 5 years old and the range is 1 to 53 years.

Half are male and half female and 87 percent are American Indian, 8 percent white, and 5 percent race unknown.

Shigella germs are found in the intestinal tract of infected people who in turn may contaminate food or water. The shigella germ is spread by eating or drinking contaminated food or water or by direct contact with an infected person.

Mild or severe diarrhea, often with fever and traces of blood or mucous in the stool, are the primary symptoms of shigellosis, although some may have no symptoms. Symptoms usually appear within two to three days of exposure.

Kightlinger said people with active diarrhea or those who are unable to control their bowel habits should be isolated to prevent the spread of shigellosis. Most infected people may return to work or school when their diarrhea ceases, provided that they carefully wash their hands after toilet visits. Food handlers, children and staff in day care, and health care workers should be excluded until two stool specimens test negative for the bacteria.

For more information about shigellosis, see the department's web site at www.state.sd.us/doh/Pubs/shigello.htm.

Casinos now a $23 billion-a-year industry

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) - Gambling revenue at American Indian casinos nationwide grew to nearly $23 billion last year, climbing at a rate more than three times faster than traditional gambling operations.

California tribes accounted for nearly a third of the money, according to a comprehensive report on Indian gambling to be released last Wednesday.

Nationwide, Indian gambling revenue grew by 15.6 percent in 2005, even though no major casinos opened last year, according to the Indian Gaming Industry Report, compiled by economist Alan Meister.

It was the 10th consecutive year in which revenues increased by about 15 percent.

The growth can be attributed to expanded offerings at existing casinos and stepped-up marketing by tribes that are adding Las Vegas-style amenities to lure more visitors.

The report shows tribal casinos closing in on the amount of profits taken in by other casinos, which had $29.6 billion in revenue in 2005, a 4.6 percent rise from the previous year.

California's tribes saw revenue climb by 24 percent, to $7.2 billion, in a state where 55 tribes operate 57 casinos. That rate of growth isn't likely to slow any time soon, Meister said.

Nebraska led all states in growth last year, at 228 percent, after adding a third casino and other offerings at existing facilities.

Only four states saw a decline in revenue: Alaska, Louisiana, Maine and South Carolina.

Meister, an economist with the Analysis Group in Los Angeles, uses data from government agencies, Indian tribes and casinos, gambling associations and other studies, as well as some proprietary financial data that tribes are not required to publicly report.

Wednesday's report also found the nation's 420 Indian casinos are responsible for the equivalent of 310,000 full-time jobs and about $10.5 billion in wages.

Meister said Indian gambling directly and indirectly accounts for $6.9 billion in tax revenue.

Whalen seeking support for his campaign, 'There are a lot of Republicans in Indian Country. They just don't know it yet'

WATERTOWN (AP) - Republican Bruce Whalen said last Friday he believes his conservative stands on abortion, taxes, the war in Iraq and other issues will help him win the race for South Dakota's lone U.S. House seat.

Whalen told Republican State Convention delegates that he remains far behind Rep. Stephanie Herseth, D-S.D., in raising campaign money but that he believes he could win by spending as little as $100,000 on the campaign.

Whalen said his beliefs as an American Indian match those held by Republican voters across South Dakota.

Whalen, from Pine Ridge, noted that Indian voters have traditionally voted for Democrats, but he said he is working to change that.

The Republican candidate talked about his opposition to abortion and his support for cutting taxes and permanently repealing the federal inheritance tax. He said it's important for the nation to remain committed to the war in Iraq so people in that country can be free.

Herseth has voted for higher taxes and gets a lot of campaign donations from organizations that support abortion rights, Whalen said, adding that those issues should help him.

``The Republican Party has a conservative platform and lines up better with Lakota values and culture. Abortion is just one of the issues,'' Whalen said. ``There are a lot of Republicans in Indian Country. They just don't know it yet.''

The Pine Ridge Indian Reservation remains one of the nation's poorest counties despite the millions of federal dollars poured into the area each year, he said.

The area is hurt by federal regulations that hamper private enterprise, said Whalen.

``Socialism doesn't work, folks,'' he said.

Whalen grew up in Pine Ridge, moved to Utah as a teen and returned to South Dakota in 1999 to raise his family. He has been working for the Oglala Sioux Tribe as coordinator of its judiciary committee.

He lost a bid in 2002 for tribal council and was unsuccessful in 2004 in his campaign for the state House of Representatives.

Whalen rallied Indian support for Republican John Thune in his 2004 victory over former Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle.

Whalen urged the GOP delegates to help him raise campaign funds by the end of the month.

He said if he can show good local support, he will get more help from national Republican campaign committees.

Crazy Horse sculptor's wife Ruth Ziolkowski in charge at 80

BY CARSON WALKER
Associated Press Writer

CRAZY HORSE MEMORIAL (AP) - Some people openly share their wisdom, experience and advice on how to live a full life. But Ruth Ziolkowski, in charge of the world's largest mountain carving, simply leads through example.

The widow of self-taught sculptor Korczak Ziolkowski, whose dream it was to honor American Indians by carving the likeness of Sioux warrior Crazy Horse into a granite mountain in the southern Black Hills, turned 80 on Monday.

The Connecticut native didn't set out to run a multimillion-dollar operation that spans a 1,000-acre complex, employs 176 - including seven of the couple's 10 children and several grandchildren _ and draws more than a million visitors a year.

But after her husband's death in 1982, Ziolkowski felt she must carry through with his commitment _ and use dynamite, drills and determination to fulfill the dream she had already adopted as her own.

``It's not a one-person deal. I'm the one that gets all of the accolades and all of the glory and it doesn't need to be that way,'' Ziolkowski said in an interview at the memorial's Laughing Water Restaurant. ``This is a team effort. It wouldn't be here if we didn't have a lot of great people.''

Even at 80, Mrs. Z, as she's known around the complex, is very much in charge. She is always willing to greet visitors with a smile, pose for a photo and ask where they're from.

Ziolkowski is genuine, sincere, humble and gracious, said Rollie Noem, chief operating officer.

``She's very detailed but also very visionary. She's an astute business person and she lives this project 24/7. It is her passion,'' Noem said.

Momentum now multiplies the effort that has relied for nearly 60 years on simple principles: hard work, honesty, respect for others, thrift, private enterprise and perseverance.

``You can't just have the dream. You've got to work for that dream. And if it isn't within you and you don't love it yourself, you're not going to do it because somebody tells you to do it. It has to come from within,'' Ziolkowski said.

That's why she still puts in longer days than anyone else here and has a peace and joy about her that are rare with people much younger.

While others work on the mountain, Ruth Ziolkowski does most of her work in her cabin where all 10 children were born. Her desk is the same linoleum-covered table all 12 family members sat around during meals.

``This is headquarters,'' she said while sitting at the head of the table, Korczak's place. ``Telephone, TV set, me.''

Papers are stacked on the table and floor. Portraits of the couple and children line the light green walls.

The setting is simple, as are the dresses and smocks Ziolkowski has made for herself every birthday and Christmas to wear with her white moccasins and hair bands.

``Hopefully there's some sort of resemblance to match,'' she said. ``It doesn't take me long to get up and get dressed in the morning.''

She doesn't use a computer but does have an e-mail system that automatically prints out the messages.

``I pick it up and read it. If I want to talk to somebody or do something about it, I pick up the telephone. If I don't want to, the wastebasket is right there,'' Ziolkowski said.

For written correspondence, which goes to everyone who contributes: ``Your hand does just fine with a pen in it.''

Ziolkowski's work ethic inspires and motivates everyone, Noem said. Her day usually starts around 5:30 a.m. when she and daughter Jadwiga Ziolkowski outline the day's plans over the phone.

Recently Ruth Ziolkowski was honored with a star quilt by the Crazy Horse riders during their annual ride. Photo by Pat Dobbs. Ruth celebrated her 80th birthday this past Monday. Crazy Horse Mountain entry fee is free to Native Americans.

She grew up as Ruth Ross in West Hartford, Conn., and met sculptor Korczak Ziolkowski when she was 13. In the late 1940s, she came to the Black Hills with other young people who volunteered to help him start Crazy Horse.

He took on the project at the invitation of Chief Henry Standing Bear, who was prompted by Gutzon Borglum's carving of nearby Mount Rushmore.

Korczak, who assisted Borglum with that project in 1939, disregarded the first letter from Standing Bear.

``The second letter had the line that really hooked Korczak,'' Ziolkowski said. ``He (Standing Bear) said, 'We would like the white man to know the red men have great heroes also.'''

After three years of contemplating the offer while voluntarily serving in World War II, Korczak came to the Black Hills for good. He and Ross were married on Thanksgiving Day 1950 at Crazy Horse and his vow to Standing Bear also became hers.

``He decided it would be well worth his life carving a mountain, not just as a memorial to the Indian people. He felt by having the mountain carving, he could give back some pride. And he was a believer that if your pride is intact you can do anything in this world you want to do,'' Ziolkowski said.

The early years of working on the project alone were difficult. But quitting was never a thought.

``It was work but it was fun. It really was.''

Ziolkowski's main role early on, besides raising the children, was hosting visitors.

After Korczak's death, she took over as leader and made some bold decisions. One of the first was to carve Crazy Horse's face before carving the horse.

The massive, lifelike face was dedicated in 1998, the 50th anniversary of the first blast, and has helped draw more attention to the project.

``She's not only kept things together but she's overseen all of the growth that has happened and the expansion and development from all fronts,'' Noem said of the carving and the buildings.

Those are projects that help raise the money that will fund the mission of reconciliation with Indians, Ziolkowski said.

``So when the mountain is finished, every dime you make then can go toward the university and the medical training center and to keep the museum going,'' she said.

In 1952, Korczak wrote his children a letter and asked them to reread it every month if they chose to help carry on the project.

The letter ends: ``You will find in the darkest hours a feeling of great strength, of great satisfaction, of great joy and happiness, in carrying out even the mundane tasks that go towards living for something far greater than yourselves.''

Nighttime blasts on the mountain are held every Sept. 6, Korczak's birthday, and June 26, Ruth's birthday. This year, Development Director Fred Tully had planned a celebration for her 80th.

Already she had two large punch bowls stuffed with birthday cards.

``I know what I'm going to be doing for quite a while after the 26th of June, because I think anybody who is kind enough to write or to send a gift to Crazy Horse should be thanked.''

`You get out of this life what you put into it. It all comes around in a circle. The Indians believe that, and you see it when you get to be 80. There are lots of things that you did to someone else that comes back to you - and good or bad.''

Honor the Youth Spiritual Run arrives in Rosebud

Suicide, alcohol, drug and violence awareness is purpose

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

The runners Sam Little Cloud (Oglala/Sicangu), Quinten Andersen (White Earth), Chuck Anderson (Mil Lacs), Doug Fairbanks (Leech Lake), Naida Medicine Crow (Crow Creek Sioux), Dakota Jordain (Crow Creek/Red Lake), Keith Cloud (La Courtes Oreilles), Arlund Wakefield (Leech Lake), Inyan Mato (Cherokee), Kason Firewolf (Oglala), David Yang (White Earth), and Kenny Dorman.

ROSEBUD - There have been an alarming number of suicides on the Rosebud that have been troubling to Sicangu people and a number of organizations and individuals have sought to draw attention to the issue, as well as that of violence, drug and alcohol abuse.

The Honor the Youth Spiritual Run III began in Ft. Yates on June 21 when the runners prepared themselves with a sweat and ended in Rosebud on June 25, covering over 250 miles as a way to bring awareness to the issues confronting Native youth. The St. Francis Indian Day powwow was also winding down on Sunday as it was thought that the runners might arrive there.

The Honor the Youth organization is based in Minneapolis and the run was coordinated by Patricia Shepherd, as the group traveled in an SUV, a mini-van, and a full sized van. Shepard said, "Suicide is an epidemic. I lost my brother and this is my personal commitment to raise awareness in a good way and by prayer. The staff was at Wakpala and someone from Rosebud requested here, so it will remain here until August 9, at which time we will run with it to Macy, Neb.. The staff was not driven one step of the way."

Naida Medicine Crow and her daughter Dakota Jourdain, 9, live in Minneapolis and finished the run. Dakota said of the run, "I thought it was kind of cool, I have never been to Rosebud." Originally from Ft.Thompson on the Crow Creek Sioux reservation, Naida, 30, works in a foster home for Native youth on the south side of Minneapolis. She is also attending college and said, "It was hard, it was good though. I was happy and honored to be part of it. We have to do something to positively influence the youth. At 'speak outs' I get to talk to the kids. I tell them to be strong and that people care."

A Native Youth Hotline is also being promoted for youth who desire an alternative resource for the many issues, including methamphetamines, which is making inroads in Indian Country. In a press release from the Honor the Youth, it was noted that, "Suicide is the second leading cause of death for Native Youth between the ages of 15-24 of age, their risk is three times higher of committing suicide then another racial/ethnic group in the country."

The Native Youth Crisis Hotline is 1-877-209-1266. The local contacts for the event as listed on the poster included Mary Tobacco for the Wanblee stop and Mike One Star and Tanya Whirlwind Soldier

Regional Hospital donates Telemedicine equipment to Pine Ridge hospital

RAPID CITY - The physicians at Pine Ridge Indian Health Services Hospital now have the ability to do long-distance, real-time consulting with Rapid City physicians and other health care professionals around the world thanks to telemedicine technology. This has been made possible by a recent Rapid City Regional Hospital donation of a medical consultation workstation, the Telesynergy® system, to the Pine Ridge hospital.

The Telesynergy® system is a medical consultation workstation that allows for the collaboration of multiple professionals using many different technologies.

The system is a PC-based videoconferencing system, which includes tools such as a diagnostic-quality microscope, patient exam camera, color video printer, radiology monitors, and a document camera.

'In some cases, it could eliminate the need for a patient to drive to Rapid City for a consultation.'

-Dr. Petereit

The workstation integrates all of these imaging capabilities into one system and allows them to be used together during a videoconference. More frequently, the system is used for real-time transmission of audio and video data for medical consultation purposes.

"Our hope is that with the availability of this equipment at Pine Ridge, IHS physicians can more easily consult with their counterparts and specialists in Rapid City," said Daniel Petereit, M.D., a radiation oncologist at the John T. Vucurevich Regional Cancer Care Institute in Rapid City. "In some cases, it could eliminate the need for a patient to drive to Rapid City for a consultation."

The Telesynergy® system at Pine Ridge Indian Health Service Hospital and the identical system at Rapid City Regional Hospital, were obtained as part of the National Cancer Institute's Cooperative Planning Grant for Cancer Disparities Research Partnership Program.

Rapid City Regional Hospital serves approximately 60,000 Native Americans from surrounding communities and reservations including Pine Ridge, Cheyenne River and Rosebud. The Pine Ridge IHS Hospital, located on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, was chosen to receive the equipment because it has the largest Native American population in the state and could provide the best facility and technical support for the operation of the system.

The National Cancer Institute's Cooperative Planning Grant for Cancer Disparities Research Partnership Program issued by the Radiation Research Program, is an effort to strengthen the national cancer program by developing models to reduce significant negative consequences of cancer disparities seen in certain U.S. populations.

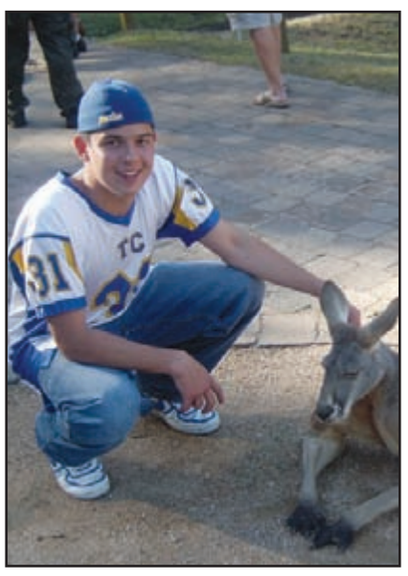
Rapid City Regional Hospital was awarded a CDRP grant in 2002 to study cancer incidence rates among the Native American community.

The grant will help to identify barriers to treatment, and develop a program to identify and assist potential cancer patients in obtaining the most appropriate diagnosis, treatment, and follow-up by helping patients navigate the health care and insurance systems.

The goal of Rapid City Regional Hospital's grant, also known as the Walking Forward program, is to diminish cancer incidence and mortality and improve the quality of life of people with cancer in the Native American community.

Matt Scott, a 2006 graduate of TCHS brings back a gold medal

Only Native student on team to win 'Down Under Bowl'



BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

MISSION - Matt Scott, a 2006 graduate of Todd County High School and the son of Darrell and Tammy Scott has been pursuing his dream of excelling in the "Down Under Bowl." The 'Bowl' was held near Brisbane, Queensland, Australia at the Gold Coast Surfers Paradise.

Athletes excelling in academics and athletics are invited by the International Sports Specialists. Athletes are required to raise their own funds to travel to the events. A number of other Sicangu athletes will also participating 'Down Under' next month.

Matt chose to participate on the ISSI South Dakota team back in December of 2005. Through a generous donation from his uncle Mike, auntie Dina and cousin JoBeth, the dedicated work of Beaver and auntie Mary, uncle Whitey, the late Bill Grimm, JR and Vickie Reagle, Kenny's Barbershop, Dale Wooden Knife, Louie Schmidt, Vicky Stroup, Auntie Ida and Keith, and numerous other friends and relatives and businesses, the Rosebud Sioux tribe, and the TCSD he was able to make the trip a reality.

Due to some athletes dropping out or not able to raise enough funds, the South Dakota team was combined with teams from North Dakota and Minnesota in order to field a team. Other ISSI teams, as they were called, also combined their rosters. Matt's team rallied against ISSI teams comprised of student athletes from Idaho, Nevada, and New Mexico as well as a combined Texas and Arkansas team and a Southern Australia team. A phone call on Sunday night confirmed that Matt's team won the championship trophy and individual gold medals, while a running back on the team won Most Valuable Player honors.

Matt Scott's team rallied against teams comprised of student athletes from Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Arkansas team and a Southern Australia team.

Matt traveled to Australia on June 19 by way of Los Angeles for a 13 hour flight to Australia over the Pacific Ocean. Once there, it was like every traveler's "dream come true" as they toured the city, swam in the ocean, walked on the beach and practiced football.

After doing the "tourist thing" in Australia, Matt is headed for Hawaii for more R & R while doing some scuba diving, surfing, visiting Pearl Harbor and enjoying an authentic Hawaiian luau. He will return to the Rosebud on June 29, Friday after a whirlwind tour of "Down Under" and Hawaii.

Matt is headed for South Dakota State University this fall where he will pursue his academic career in the College of Agriculture and Biology. It is likely with a list of accomplishments too numerous to mention Matt will discover other challenges that will keep him busy and enjoying a very bright future.

As the only Sicangu Lakota on the combined South Dakota, North Dakota, and Minnesota football team, all of the Rosebud Sioux reservation and Indian Country were well represented and are proud of Matt.

Some of Matt's friends will be traveling "Down Under" in July to participate in basketball, volleyball, and golf. Matt encourages all to support the fundraising efforts of Shawndai Prue, Amiel 'Mook' Redfish, Taylor Brushbreaker, and Chris Leroy.

for the Rosebud.

On Saturday, the runners were seen on their way to Green Grass community on the Cheyenne River Sioux reservation and on Sunday they had left Wanblee in the morning on the Pine Ridge reservation headed for the Rosebud Sioux reservation where they arrived in the late afternoon. The pow-wow music was blaring and despite little fan fare, the Sicangu people who witnessed their arrival were nevertheless impressed at their dedication and commitment that ended in a journey that ended well. In this case, the journey and the destination were equally as important. Sam Little Cloud, the staff carrier, is part Oglala and Sicangu Lakota and had never been to the Rosebud before.

Inyan Mato, is part Cherokee and a fitness assistant at an assisted living unit in Mille Lacs, Minn. He was discovering his Native heritage for the first time by being on the run. He said, "Each step is a prayer. This lines up with my life. I'm learning my heritage and passing it on. I grew up in the city and this is the most challenging thing I have done in my life. I have 15 nephews and nieces running for kids along the way. The message we bring is mental health. When we arrive we bring them hope."

Tanya Whirlwind Soldier and Wopila Bad Hand were designated as the welcome team for the runners, while Tillie Black Bear, Terri Stone and other staff from the White Buffalo Calf Women's Shelter were on hand to also welcome the runners and serve them a meal. Stone and Bad Hand joined the runners on the last leg of the run to welcome them to Rosebud followed by their vans with powwow music blaring.

The runners arrived at the Diabetes Prevention facilities where they were fed and were able to rest before taking part in the sweat lodge held in St. Francis that was arranged by Bad Hand who is on the staff at the program. The runners were, Sam Little Cloud (Oglala/Sicangu), Quinten Andersen (White Earth), Chuck Anderson (Mil Lacs), Doug Fairbanks (Leech Lake), Naida Medicine Crow (Crow Creek Sioux), Dakota Jordain (Crow Creek/Red Lake), Keith Cloud (La Courtes Oreilles), Arlund Wakefield (Leech Lake), Inyan Mato (Cherokee), Kason Firewolf (Oglala), David Yang (White Earth), and Kenny Dorman.

Defenders will not attend gathering

RAPID CITY - In any effort to preserve and protect places that have been, and continue to be, sacred to Indigenous peoples, the ultimate action of respect must always be considered.

Many people have asked if Defenders of the Black Hills will be participating in the Gathering that is scheduled to begin July 4 at Bear Butte and continue through the Sturgis Motorcycle Rally. After attending many prayer ceremonies starting last fall, 2005, and consulting with both spiritual leaders and elders, we have been advised NOT to attend.

In order to continue to uphold the traditions of the Tetuwan (Lakota) people, and other Native American nations that pray and hold ceremonies at Bear Butte, and to adhere to our organization's own principle of respect for sacred places, Defenders of the Black Hills will NOT be participating in the upcoming Gathering scheduled to begin July 4.

Range Survey on the Pine Ridge Reservation

Ecosystem Research Group (ERG), a Montana-based consulting company, will be continuing the range survey of the Pine Ridge Reservation for the Oglala Sioux Tribe during the months of May, June, and July 2006. ERG's field office is based in Kadoka, SD, and field crews will be sampling vegetation and conducting similarity index surverys on grazing allotments across the eastern portion of the reservation. The majority of the western portion of the reservation was previously surveyed in 2004 and 2005.

Field technicians will be using a combination of pickup trucks, ATV, and foot travel to access the allotments, and any travel recommendations and requests from permittees are welcome and very helpful. ERG vehicles include late model white Ford F150s, a green Dodge Dakota pickup, and a white Toyota Tundra. All vehicles will be marked with the company logo, and all employees will carry a letter of verification.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am writing to you out of concern, I have been told that somebody said that me and my husband are not going to last and this worries me.

I see us being together for a long time and I know there is some problems that have to be worked on but we are willing to do it and try our best.

Recently I have had a terrible dream about him leaving to the spirit world and he woke me and I was crying and when I went back to sleep again I went straight back into the same dream. Is there any meaning of this dream?

Concerned

Dear Concerned:

Somebody said?

Well, somebody will always say....so please understand that what somebody says has no bearing on you in any way. We are independent beings, and sometimes our decisions are shadowed by other people's opinions, but other people's opinions do not matter in our lives unless we decide that they do.

Does this "somebody" have more importance and understanding about you and your life than you do? If not, let it go...and if so, then take another look at yourself. Independent thinking, being the most important person in your own decision making, and leading a life that you are comfortable with in your own heart should always have more importance and affect on you than any "somebody."

The dream is very scary. I asked Spirit if there is any validity to it in your immediate future and the response is, "There is always validity in dreams - or they are messages - but it does not imply or mean that the man in question will die. It simply means that she is afraid that he will be taken from her or leave her, either by choice or in some other way.

There is no reason to believe that he is going to pass away anytime in the near future."

So, simply put, it means that your fear has such a big hold on you that you are suffering for no reason except what you have in your mind.

Try faith instead of fear, it makes life a whole lot easier. Fear, by the way, in my opinion, is the devil's wedge. It separates us from life, love, and peace.

Don't give so much time to fear. Visualize a good life, not a horrible one.

Remember, we create that which we believe in the most in our own lives...if you believe in pain, then that is where you will live, but if you believe in joy then the outcome is joyful.

Good luck in clearing fear and dread and others opinions out of your life.

Dear Anna,

I have concerns of my daughter, she is a beautiful young lady and I know she has a secret alcohol addiction but she is in such denial. She won't listen to me when I talk to her of it, she says she isn't like that.

I love her very much and I don't want to strain our relationship but I know I have to do something soon or we will both regret it in the future.

Why is she hurting so to be addicted like that? What do I say to her?

Loving mother

Dear Loving Mother:

Bless your heart. As mothers, fathers, sisters, or brothers, we cannot reach inside anybody else and force them into awareness. Your daughter's behavior is not based on so much pain, it is rather based on an unfulfilled heart and boredom. It is a social pattern and keeps her preoccupied with "external" life - that which goes on outside of her. It keeps her busy and social with friends.

There is so much information about addiction and dependency and codependency available that I know by now you have heard it all, but basically what I really and truly understand is this:

1. Alcohol and drugs start with social patterns with friends.

2. Social acceptance and "fun" times will take over a person's life if they do not have a firm relationship with the Spirit Within them and a strong relationship with the Creator.

3. It is very hard to find your balance socially when you are young without peer acceptance.

4. Maturity and love of life usually don't come until a person is a little older.

Your daughter will find sobriety when she suffers a hard loss sometime in the next year or year and a half.

It is her journey mom, her life, and her choice.

She is not a bad person...as a matter of fact, she has a good future after she gives up on what doesn't work in a good way for her: the pursuit of a man that isn't good for her, his friends, and their values.

Have patience and pray for her. She'll be okay.

Dear Anna,

I am waiting for this one special guy. But what if he doesn't wait for me? Can you see him in my future?

I hope and pray every day that one special day will come. I know this is an unusual comment to answer to.

Waiting

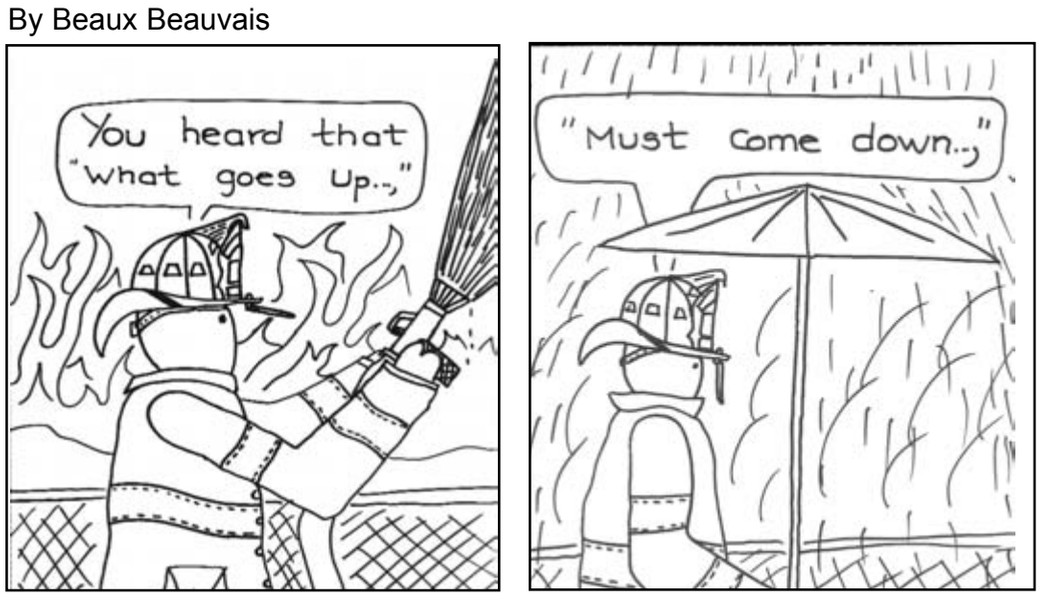
Dear Waiting:

Well, the way I see things each of us has at least one person on the earth that is our mate. Synchronicity or the rhythm of the earth in harmony with the Creator brings to us that which we desire and that which is to be ours because it is for the highest good. Sometimes, something (or someone) that we pray for is not going to be given to us.

Sometimes the Creator says no because it is not in concordance with our highest good. In this case, what I understand is that this man you are waiting for is with someone else and will not be available for many years.

How long do you want to wait?

Perhaps waiting for him is just an excuse not to be open to anybody else. Just go with the flow girl. As long as you have to live life anyway, then why not see what else is out there for you? If no one else shows up then okay, you have waited and at least lived open to love.



If you wish to be on standby and just wait, then that is okay too. What is meant to be won't be missed, it will happen, all in good time.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests maybe subject to publication.

KILI Radio bumps power up to 300 watts, looks to fall for new equipment

PORCUPINE - KILI Radio's engineer, Tracy Krsnak, installed a 300 watt amp to go with the temporary antenna and transmission line on Tuesday, June 27.

"This is still low power," said Melanie Janis, station manager, "we had been broadcasting with a 15 watt exciter so now we have 300 watts, certainly not anywhere close to our licensed 100,000 watts but it's another step on our way back to full power."

Results are mixed, the engineer listened all the way back to his house, 90 miles away while Ivan Bettelyoun listened from Oglala all the way out to the casino and back but Pine Ridge is still scratchy and so is Kyle.

KILI radio airwaves also could be heard in Martin also.

"It is looking more like late September or early October before we are back to full power," added Janis; "we are still raising money for new equipment and for the potential match to a Department of Commerce grant that is still in the works."

The station is not yet back to full programming as the studio is being remodeled.

KILI Radio can still be heard on the Internet on the radio station's website at www.kiliradio.org.

White Plume at helm, after impeachment of Cecelia Fire Thunder

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PORCUPINE - On election day during the first week of November in 2004, members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe made Cecelia Fire Thunder the first woman ever to be elected president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe; the following month Fire Thunder took the oath of office as the 36th president and on June 29, 19 months into her two year term, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council voted 9-4 to impeach Fire Thunder and end her term five months early.

"This is about abortion, and only about abortion," said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge Village who along with Garfield Steele, council representative from Wounded Knee District filed the complaint against Fire Thunder "by proposing an abortion clinic on Pine Ridge Reservation, she has brought national attention to the Oglala Sioux Tribe and she attempted to use abortion to test the sovereignty of the Oglala Sioux Tribe against the new state law against abortion."

Peters and Steele brought up a complaint against Fire Thunder during the May 30 special tribal council session at Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge; the council voted to suspend Fire Thunder for 20

Rosebud Casino financial report for May disappoining

Boltz says finances are good

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Trent Poignee, General Manager of the Rosebud Casino delivered the May report to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal council and described its overall performance for the month "depressing." The buffet and bingo revenues were adequate, however, the slot machines and the table games were "missing budget." The total revenue for the month was $1,048,028 dollars compared to a budget of $1,265,155 dollars or $269,000 dollars less than last year. The payment to RST for the month was $51,151 dollars, missing budget more than $250,000 dollars.

A couple of RST council representatives offered their explanation of the apparent shortfall. District 3 Antelope council representative, Jo Colombe, said it was due to personnel costs as well as the fact that the casino has been attracting a younger crowd. Younger people do not have as much disposable cash to spend.

RST council representative, Mike Boltz, of St. Francis agreed that personnel and overhead costs were a significant portion of the associated cost and resulting down swing in revenues and that the entertainment industry nationwide appears to be suffering. He also said that location was a factor, as the target population in Nebraska has been saturated. After all, how much blood can one squeeze out of a turnip he said. He noted, "We looked at coupons and comps and they are quite substantial." He said that 'giveaways' are somewhat deceptive, as they represent an expense; however, they appear to inflate the gross revenue."

Boltz continued, "The last several reports appeared to be a train wreck that was going to hap-

Grooms estate brings in $334 per acre

Tribal pressure forces auction from Rockyford School to Scenic

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

ROCKYFORD/SCENIC - When the dust settled in Scenic on Friday, June 30, 1600 acres from seven different parcels of the Frank Groom's estate and Kan Groom's land holdings brought in $486,956.30 through an auction conducted by McPherson Auction Co. out of Rapid City. Adding in the buyer's premium, a 10 per cent surcharge added to the sale, average cost of each acre came to $334.45.

The largest parcel, a 609.37 acre piece just south of the Nick Cummings ranch in Manderson, went for $290 per acre and $319 per acre with the buyer's premium and was purchased by the OST Empowerment Zone for potential commercial, residential or light manufacturing use at a later date.

A 152.18 acre parcel in Wounded Knee, south of the old store, sold for $550/605 per acre to Lyla Huchinson while a 160 acre parcel in the same section sold for $250/275 per acre also to Lyla Huchinson.

The McPherson Auction Company set up the Frank Grooms Estate and Dan Grooms land sale on Friday, June 30 at Rockyford School. Two police officers from the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Department of Public Safety, Harold Brewer and John Mousseau, delivered a letter from Alex White Plume, president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe requesting a halt to the sale because the auction company did not have a business license from the tribe. Finding the tribe's tax office closed and unable to purchase a license, the auction company moved the land sale to the Longhorn Food and Fuel store in Scenic. The ten registered buyers and two dozen interested community members made the move to Scenic.

"There were some comments made stating that Rockyford School was deeded land and the tribal police or the tribe had no jurisdiction over the sale," said Todd O'Bryan, a local rancher at the sale and a long time member of the Shannon County School Board, "the schools policy is whenever possible to honor all tribal ordinances, we work closely with the tribe's Department of Public Safety."

During the tribal council meeting on Thursday, June 29, the council voted to direct the OST treasurer to find money that could be used by the tribe to purchase land during the sale on Friday.

Impeachment of Fire Thunder

During last Thursday's Oglala Sioux Tribal council meeting, Alex White Plume introduced Jack Billion, a South Dakota Democrat of Sioux Falls who will be on the November contending against current governor Michael Rounds. Billion spoke to the audience of his agenda in running for governor. Photo by Amanda Takes War Bonnett.

days without pay and set up a hearing. The complaint that was sent to Fire Thunder on June 2 by tribal secretary Rhonda Two Eagle included the fact that she invited federal and state law onto a sovereign reservation by challenging the new state abortion law, begin her own abortion clinic under the auspices of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, for using the OST e-mail, news media and post office box to solicit funds for her own endeavors, for violating the OST code, constitution and by-laws and violating natural, cultural, traditional and spiritual laws among other things.

"By expressing an idea about abortion, I am being crucified, I believe in standing up for women all over and I believe the new state abortion law is far too conservative," said Fire Thunder in her defense, "we have 13, 14 and 15 year olds getting pregnant on Pine Ridge and not by strangers, we have problems with both rape and incest and I think a woman has the right to make a choice."

This was the third hearing held by the council on complaints made on the tribal president; Alberta Iron Cloud Miller, past director of the tribe's Headstart program filed a complaint in the spring of 2005 accusing Fire Thunder of mismanaging the Headstart program and unjustly firing Miller. A second complaint was filed by William Bird Necklace Tate in October of 2005 accusing Fire Thunder of undermining the sovereignty of the tribe by pushing for the $38 million loan with Shakopee and elder abuse. Both complaints were dismissed after a hearing before the council.

"We have come together to hear the complaints against the president and make a decision," said Ruth Brown, council representative from Eagle Nest District, "I say this administration is done, we do not need religion to be brought into the political arena, my decision is you are impeached."

Tribal secretary, Rhonda Two Eagle presided over the hearing that included 14 of the 18 tribal council representatives. Following open statements by both Steele and Peters and Fire Thunder, each of the parties presented their evidence and answered questions from the floor before the council retired to the elderly building across the street to deliberate their decision.

In addition to expressing her right to discuss ideas like a women's health clinic on Pine Ridge, Fire Thunder felt that the process was not followed, that the complainants filed the complaint with the secretary two days after the council accepted the complaint on her, and that she only got the supporting packet of documents on the day of the hearing instead of the complaint being filed with all of the supporting documents with the secretary before it went to the council floor.

Following a two hour executive session, the council voted 9-5 in favor of impeaching Fire Thunder on the first of six charges. Voting to impeach were Valerie Janis/Oglala, Will Peters and Ella John Carlow/Pine Ridge, Maxine Lakota/Wakpamni, Kathy Janis and Garfield Steele/Wounded Knee, Lydia Bear Killer/Pass Creek, Bernard White Face/Porcupine and Ruth Brown/Eagle Nest. Voting against impeachment was Austin Watkins and Juanita Scherich/Medicine Root, Tom Poor Bear/Eagle Nest, Mary Poor Thunder/LaCreek and Philip Good Crow/Porcupine.

Lyle Jack/Pine Ridge, Walt Big Crow/Wakpamni, Paul Little/Oglala and Craig Dillon/LaCreek were not in attendance at the meeting on Thursday.

"Point of order," said Brown, "Tom Poor Bear's vote should not count because he was not recognized by the chair when we came back after the executive session."

According to Rhonda Two Eagle, presiding officer for the hearing, Poor Bear was excused to go into Pine Ridge when the council moved to the elderly building for the executive session deliberation and when he returned and joined the deliberations and sat down for the vote he wasn't recognized formally by the chair so his vote did not count and the resulting 9-4 official tally met the two thirds requirement for impeachment.

"No consideration was given to the president for all of the work that she had accomplished during her term, work that included taking the lead on the Shakopee loan, finding additional monies in Washington to fund close to 60 officers with the tribe's Department of Public Safety, getting some of the FMHA loan written down so our annual payments are half a million dollars less each year, negotiating with the Indian Health Service and the BIA on past administrations disallowed costs and current work to get more money added to the IHS budget," said past tribal president Paul Iron Cloud.

Will Peters, Oglala Sioux Council representative from Pine Ridge speaks to the media during the council meeting in regards to Fire Thunder's impeachment.

Media that attended the hearing aside from local media, were Associated Press, Rapid City Journal, Indian Country Today and a local television station.

The council formally voted to move Alex White Plume into the president's position and to leave the vice president's position vacant for the rest of the term.

"Good, I am glad she is gone, we need to move ahead," said Joyce Sun Bear, a resident of Wounded Knee and host of the Lakota Winyan Wicaho show on KILI Radio.

In the opening moments of the hearing in Porcupine, the council voted to have no media present, no video cameras or radio broadcast during the hearing.

"I'm really surprised by the action of the council," said Chris Eagle Hawk, "they should not get involved in an area that really is a woman's area, it is their right to make those decisions, I don't think the council should be involved in that area."

After the vote, the majority of those in attendance clapped and cheered the actions of the council. Fire Thunder quietly shook hands with her supporters and left the CAP office as her staff went to Pine Ridge to clean out the president's office. Alex White Plume moved into the presiding chairs seat for the remainder of the meeting.

"It will be OK, "said Fire Thunder as she left the building, "I am continuing on with my plans for next week to take the tribal pipe to the sun dance and pray for all of the people and look ahead to the future."

Four other parcels were also part of the sale and were purchased on Friday including: a 40 acre parcel north of Nick Cummings ranch in Manderson by Paul Bertelson for $460/518 per acre, a 160 acre parcel east of Porcupine by Paul Bertelson at $355/390 per acre, a 160 acre parcel north and west of Sharps Corner by Lex and Gilvert Grooms for $100/110 per acre and a 320 acre parcel three and a half miles north of Sharps and one half mile west by Lex and Gilbert Grooms for $295/326 per acre.

Paul Bertelson heads up Youth Works, a faith based initiative that for the last 13 years has brought youth from around the country to Pine Ridge Reservation for a week at a time during the summer to renovate homes and buildings. Lex and Gilbert Grooms operate a ranch north of Sharps.

A second auction to sell off household and ranch goods is scheduled for the Frank Grooms place east of Porcupine in 30 days.

pen…, my opinion is that we have inexperienced management."

Apparently, RST has engaged in an executive search to hire a management firm to operate the casino, while Boltz says that a new perspective is needed with the tribal council continuing to act as a watch dog.

Boltz did note a sense of optimism despite the down turn in May, when he said that the financial health of the casino is excellent as it has assets amounting to over a million dollars.

Last week, the Lakota Country Times carried a story which noted that tribal casinos nationwide are climbing at a rate that is three times the traditional gaming operations and is currently a $23 billion dollar industry. It has increased by 15 percent each year for the tenth consecutive year and revenues have increased by 15 percent. There are 420 Indian casinos employing some 310,000 employees and they generated $10.5 billion in revenue.

Indian vote affected if act expires

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Landmark provisions in the federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 soon could expire, taking away powerful deterrents to discrimination against Indian voters in South Dakota and threatening to halt an upward trend in voter turnout on reservations.

In the past 30 years, the provisions have forced South Dakota to submit 3,048 voting law changes in Todd and Shannon counties for approval by the Department of Justice and have required Lakota speaking interpreters at polling places in 11 counties.

Provisions of the Voting Rights Act are the underpinning of a renaissance in Indian voting, resulting in a 122 percent increase in turnout in Shannon County on the Pine Ridge Reservation, and a 139 percent increase in Todd County on the Rosebud Reservation, between 2000 and 2004.

Whatever their impact, they hang in the balance as Congress attempts to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act this summer. The effort is being held hostage by a handful of House members from Georgia and other Southern states who want those states exempted from Justice Department scrutiny of election procedures. Republican House leaders will not let the reauthorization bill come to the floor until that issue is resolved.

The Voting Rights Act requires the Justice Department to approve or ``preclear'' election law changes in jurisdictions that have a past history of voter discrimination. The ACLU used that provision of the act in three key federal lawsuits affecting South Dakota. It successfully sued to force Buffalo County to redraw county commission lines so the majority of Native American voters were not packed into a single district.

Preclearance cases

In the Alfred Boneshirt and Elaine Quick Bear Quiver v. (then Secretary of State) Joyce Hazeltine lawsuits in 2002, the ACLU was able to extend preclearance to Todd and Shannon counties.

The verdicts in those suits triggered Nelson to submit to the Justice Department the thousands of changes in election rules in Shannon and Todd counties, going back to 1972, with a rationale explaining why those changes were not discriminatory. The Justice Department has upheld every one, Nelson said.

Jennifer Ring, executive director of the ACLU of the Dakotas, said ``we consider preclearance a critical check in the Voting Rights Act because of something you can't see - jurisdictions complying with the law.''

Because of the successful litigation, election officials have refrained from making changes that would have harmed Native American voters, she said, because they knew those changes would not be precleared.

``Frankly, because they knew it would not preclear, they ended up not doing it,'' she said. ``If we lose preclearance, that would be a significant step backward.''

Lakota interpreters

Because of the Voting Rights Act, the state this year took on the task of providing instructions in Lakota for using computerized voting machines in 11 counties near reservations.

Because of the Voting Rights Act, auditors in those counties also are responsible for ensuring that Lakota speakers are on hand at the polls to explain voting procedures to voters who want such instruction in that language.

Nelson thinks Congress will reauthorize the Voting Rights Act this summer.

If the provisions affecting Indian Country are allowed to expire, ``it not does not mean everything that has been done over the last 40 or 50 years is not there anymore,'' Ring said. ``It means a level of protection disappears. It probably means more litigation.''

Our Views

If they wipe out our sacred places, they wipe us out

Lakota people will descend upon Bear Butte to take a stand against the desecration which is occurring as a result of development by Jay Allen and others.

Their concert venues and 'biker bars' are disturbing news to the many Lakota people who choose to pray and are healed at the sacred Mato Paha.

On July 4 Lakota people will be joined by other tribes; Osage, Ponca, our allies the Northern Cheyenne and other tribal nations as we gather for the opening ceremonies for the 'Gathering of Nations to Defend Bear Butte.

The serenity and peaceful nature of the once pristine wilderness has been broken for some time now. However, the noise and exploitation of the land and indigenous people is continuing to infringe upon the destiny of the Lakota people.

The disruption is coming even nearer to the sacred Bear Butte and it is time for all tribal nations who pray there to stand together.

Debra White Plume of Owe Aku sent out a press release noting that the Black Hills Nation Treaty Council and the Intertribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte will be a part of the effort to send a voice to the universe at sunrise.

The sacred mountain is under direct threat and Lakota people will work to protect the destiny that is theirs.

White Plume wrote, "While all of Mother Earth is sacred, while all the Black Hills are sacred, Bear Butte is the mountain under the most direct threat so we will gather there to send our voice to our Creator and our Ancestors and ask them to stand with us, to ask our Sacred Mountain to stand with us, in this effort to protect our destiny as Lakota people and they many other Tribal Nations who hold Bear Butte as Sacred."

A summit of Indigenous people will also be convened on August 1-4 to discuss and pray about a collective strategy on long term sacred land protection.

It is a rather sad commentary, but nevertheless true, when you see pictures of exploitation and development so close to the sacred Bear Butte. "A picture is worth a thousand words" indeed, holds true as the land has been torn away from Mother Earth.

You can almost feel the collective irritation and agony of Lakota people who give a darn for the land which has been undisturbed since time immemorial and which now is being violated.

Last week the Rosebud Sioux Tribe passed a motion to ask Senator Thune to issue a statement against the desecration of the sacred Bear Butte and it was passed unanimously. District 3 Antelope council representative, Roger Moore, framed the issue correctly when he said, "It is heart breaking that the offenders of this assault, Jay Allen and the Meade County Commissioners chose revenue over people. That is the bottom line for them."

Lakota language activities popular

We have incorporated articles written by Dr. Archie Beauvais and Francis Apple on our website at www.lakotacountrytime.com.

In reviewing the counter of how many times different menus on our website has been hit, we noticed, the articles that are written in Lakota have been accessed many, many times.

We hope that this can be attributed to the fact that there is an interest in our readers locally but most likely these hits are from mainstream Internet, from people who are interested in the language.

Stereotyping - beyond political correctness

By Doreen Yellow Bird
Grand Forks Herald Columunist
Reprinted with permission

I've always been reasonably sure that I don't stereotype groups of people - and I repeat the word, reasonably. But if you're a longtime reader, you'll know that one of my colleagues challenges my beliefs from time to time.

In fact, we have heated conversations about many issues including stereotyping.

And although we often wander far from a point of agreement, we usually concede the value of good and open conversation and debate.

I would sooner have an open conversation with both points of view on the table than an insincere talk that closes with a nice smile and wave. If we stay away from personalities, debates can be insightful, telling and eye-opening.

That said, I'll try to get my points about stereotyping past my colleague, who also happens to be my editor.

Stereotyping, the dictionary says, is "a fixed or conventional notion or conception, as of a person, group, idea, etc., held by a number of people, and allowing for no individuality, critical judgment, etc." Another way to put it is: simplifying, exaggerating, distorting or generalizing selected cultural attributes as being "natural."

As American Indians know, we are probably the "poster children" of stereotyping. True, many stereotyping comments come out of the mouths of people who are unaware of the culture and lifestyles of tribal nations, but sincerely want to learn, it must be said.

They are good people who do not mean to offend and would be shocked to think they have offended.

I have to smile at this point when I think about some of the questions and comments I heard in my travels around the nation. "Tell us about the teepees you live in." "Who is your medicine man?" And my favorite: "I have a relative who was a Indian princess." These may be stereotypes, but they also are from people who may be merely uninformed. I take such comments lightly.

But words such as savage (or adding "Fighting" to the name of a tribal group), buck, squaw and papoose do not bring to mind the same images as do the words man, soldier or baby.

Those, I do not take lightly.

Another stereotype that acts on me like fingers dragging over slate is referring to Indians as "drunken Indians" - and unfortunately a common stereotype of Indian people. One day, I remember, my sister and I were in a tribal casino, and a young man with a bottle of Budweiser in his hand was commenting on Indians, casinos and alcohol problems. It was funny because I am strictly a water, juice and soda-pop drinker, but there we were, listening to him as he expounded on "Indians" through tangy, pungent beer-breath.

So who is stereotyping here: the young man with the beer or the columnist?

I raise my hand for that young man, but I realize that if I write in a way that suggests all young men drink Bud and make ill-informed comments, then I will have committed "stereotyping."

Here's the example that started this nearly weeklong conversation about stereotyping. Recently, I wrote a column about methamphetamine . "I saw a car full of men whom I knew were outsiders," I wrote.

And my assumption was that the men might be up to no good. They were not from the reservation. My sisters and I could tell from their dress and actions; plus, between us, we know most of the people in our community.

We also are aware of the problems reservations are experiencing currently with meth and outside "visitors."

So, that's not a stereotype, I argued.

It is being aware of my surroundings. When I lived in Washington, I knew that women shouldn't walk alone in parts of the city. Knowing such things is part of being aware of your environment, protecting yourself and being streetwise.

People on reservations tend to have low or modest incomes. Because of that, do we stereotype the rich and powerful? Maybe. Reservation environments aren't full of power brokers and rich people.

So, perhaps, we do stereotype the wealthy because we have felt the control they've had over our lives and still do in many ways. It's a fact.

It's only been a few years since reservations started being whistle-stop places for political campaigns.

Why?

Because we didn't vote in earlier years, so politicians could afford to ignore us. Many Indians separated themselves from outside politics.

But today, our voting population is growing, and so are the number of visits from political candidates. And the stereotype of the rich has grown as fast as the stereotype of outsiders coming to the reservation to cook meth.

Stereotyping can be hurtful and a negative power.

It separates groups of people and makes them adversaries, taking them further and further from each other and allowing less and less intercommunication that can bring understanding.

Northern Perspectives

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 could affect Lakota people

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Nationwide, the latest on the Voting Rights Act of 1965 is that many advocates are urging their congressional delegations to quickly pass the legislation that is also important to Lakota voters in South Dakota.

Some wanted the U. S. House of Representatives to quickly re-authorize it before the Fourth of July recess; however that is not likely as some southern Republicans are complaining that the Act unfairly subjects their states to special scrutiny based on a sad legacy of historical discrimination against Black voters in the 1960's.

The Voting Rights Act has been re-authorized four times since its inception in 1965 and it purpose is to ensure that there is no discrimination at voting polls.

If the Act is not re-authorized by 2007, certain provisions in the Act will expire.

It was expected that the Act would be quickly renewed by the House, however, that was not the case and the Senate has not debated the issue yet.

It will be debated by the House after the Fourth of July break.

In Lakota country, the Voting Rights Act has had a direct consequence in an ever increasing registration and voter turnout of Lakota people; while Lakota lawmakers at several different levels have been successfully voted into office.

One feature of the Voters Rights Act that has been vital to Lakota voters is the requirement that the Justice Department approve or "preclear" any election law changes that originate from jurisdictions which have historically discriminated against minority voters.

It took the Boneshirt lawsuit in 2002 to force the state to submit to the Justice Department thousands of changes in election law that had made in the last 30 years in Todd and Shannon counties.

The ACLU took the lead in that case and sees pre-clearance critical to the Voters Rights Act as it often discourages the state from making re-districting changes that would likely not be pre-cleared by the Justice Department.

Districts near Lakota reservations, this year, have also purchased new computerized voting machines which provide instruction in Lakota.

Lakota interpreters will also be available in polling places to assist Lakota voters who wish to hear instructions in Lakota.

Jennifer Ring has said that if the Voters Rights Act is not renewed, it will mean that a layer of protection for Lakota voters will not be there and that it will likely result in more litigation by the ACLU.

Lakota voters are encouraged to contact their congressional delegation to encourage immediate passage of the Voters Rights Act of 1965 as soon as possible after the Fourth of July recess.

There is a direct connection between the Act and voter willingness to vote for certain candidates.

The Act ensures equal protection under voter election law changes that are subjected to pre-clearance approval from the Justice Department.

We cannot afford the prospect of being discriminated against by those who might want to eliminate certain districts where Lakota voters have a good chance of being elected. And, it is equally vital that all Lakota speakers fully understand the voting procedures and what issues are being voted upon.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Notes From Indian Country

The bus keeps turning to the right

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

If an American listens almost entirely to radio show hosts from the far right, the opinions will enhance that person's knowledge, but that knowledge will be slanted to the right. The same would be true of anyone who puts all of their eggs into the basket of the far left.

The bus needs to stay in the middle of the road.

The influx of rightist radio shows bashing the media as "liberal," has had a profound impact on the people bombarded daily with this ridiculous accusation.

Repeat a lie often enough and it will become truth. Bill O'Reilly is notorious for this.

The abundance of rightwing radio shows has pushed the so-called "liberal" media off of the charts. Take the community of Rapid City, SD for example. Listeners have little choice in the programming stinking up the free airwaves.

We get to hear Rush "Viagra" Limbaugh, Sean "WMD" Hannity, Bill "I Never Lie" O'Reilly, Laura "The Shrew" Ingrams and Michael "God's Little Acre" Medved, to name just a few.

It has reached the point in this community that I listen to more CD's than I do to talk radio.

We have reached the point of saturation from the far right and it has become increasingly clear that the mindset of the local population has made that sharp right turn in conjunction with the palaver they have drummed into their dear little ears on a daily basis.

A good number of people out here believe that, according to their interpretation of the Bible, man lived along side of the dinosaurs and eventually killed them all.

It is thinking like this that can set science back 1,000 years. South Dakota is fast becoming the home of the right wing nuts.

When a community such as Sturgis, SD can approve a liquor license for a soon-to-be raucous beer joint within shouting distance of one of the most sacred holy places of the Lakota and other Plains Indian Tribes in order to draw larger crowds and make more money from the hideous Sturgis Motorcycle Rally held annually in the Sacred Black Hills of the Lakota, where do we draw the line? Would the city council of Sturgis approve a liquor license for an establishment to be built next to one of their churches or schools? Never!

And yet they see no problem in building one next to the outdoor church of the Indian people.

The decidedly right wing body of the South Dakota State Legislature, along with their right leaning Governor Mike Rounds, took it upon themselves to cross that line this year and introduce legislation in the guise of HB1215 that would make it a criminal act for a doctor to perform an abortion, even if that abortion was to terminate a pregnancy caused by rape or incest. Crowed on state legislator, "It doesn't matter how the pregnancy happened because all babies are sacred." Tell that to a woman or a girl that has been raped or has been the victim of incest. Another legislator attempted to describe the differences between a simple rape as opposed to a rape in general. Is there such a thing as a "simple rape?"

The right wing politicians and believers preach that there is only one way and that is their way.

The rights of women have been severely diminished in South Dakota and I cannot help but applaud those fearless people who took a petition across this state to get the abortion issue on the ballot for the November elections.

Every one should know that abortion is always a bad choice, but one must also consider each case individually and the final decision, at least in my mind, should always be left to the woman and her doctor. Preventing teen pregnancy should be a top priority for those so vehemently opposed to abortion and yet these same individuals are dead set against allowing the teaching of a course in sex education in the schools.

Don't they realize that if a pregnancy were prevented by birth control there would be no abortions?

South Dakota got its name on the national calendar by passing legislation they knew would be challenged by its own citizens. Surely they also knew that it would have to go through many legal hoops before reaching the U. S. Supreme Court and the cost to the state would be enormous.

One very serious citizen was willing to put up $1 million to defend HB1215, and no single newspaper or radio station in this state was willing or able to find out the name of this Good Samaritan.

Whoever he, she or it was, they hid under the veil of anonymity.

And as this state tilts further to the right it also drags the wishy washy council of the Oglala Sioux Tribe along with it.

With healthcare for women on the reservation seriously wanting and with homeless, abused and abandoned children far out of proportion to the population and teen pregnancy near epidemic on the Pine Ridge Reservation, this tribal council chose to walk lockstep with the white, rightwing South Dakota State legislators.

With my choice of radio talk shows severely limited and my freedoms eroding one by one, I think it high time I took my retirement and moved to another state.

South Dakota has been my home since birth and I never thought I would want to leave it, but I cannot stay in the middle of the road if the bus I am riding keeps taking right turns.

But I won't leave because if I do, they win.

Fireworks Safety Tips

The Rosebud Sioux Reservation is experiencing another dry year. Fire danger is always present and any unplanned human caused fire has the potential to cause loss of life, property and valuable resources. Residents using fireworks should obey all fireworks regulations and restrictions.

Here are some tips for safe use of fireworks.

- Use fireworks in parking lots, driveways and gravel of dirt areas.
- Where legal, use fireworks outdoors and in a safe area away from fields, grassy areas & buildings.
- Keep a bucket of water, shovel, and a garden hose nearby.

- Follow instructions carefully and use with close adult supervision.
- Do not discharge fireworks from moving vehicles.
- Let fireworks cool, then soak them in water before disposing of debris.

- Use only fireworks that are approved.
- Remember, fireworks may be restricted in your area, so check before you use.

WWII Sioux Code Talker, Charles White Pipe dies

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

GREGORY - The funeral for World War II Sioux code talker, Charles White Pipe, Sr., 87, was held today at the Gregory auditorium where more than 300 people were in attendance. Before his death, he was one of two remaining Sioux code talkers along with Clarence Wolf Guts of Wanblee who often stays in the Veterans home in the Hot Springs VA center.

Dignitaries attending the funeral were, RST tribal chairman Rodney M. Bordeaux who issued an executive proclamation, Dr. Don Nemer, Doug Pochop, Jean Faber of Senator Thune's Sioux Falls, and SGU President, Lionel Bordeaux.

Pallbearers included, Tim Scissons, Jim Keegen of the REA, Jim Bennett, Louis Harsin, Gerald Night Pipe, and Dale Wilcutts, Jr. A fly-over was scheduled, however, the aircraft scheduled were unable to fly because of poor weather conditions. Honorary pallbearers were all Rural Electric Association employees and the Brotherhood of Christian Unity.

After the military funeral with full honors, the U.S. flag was given by the family to Charles White Pipe, Jr., according to daughter, Gayle. During the meal a cake sponsored by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe was presented by RST Chief of Staff, Mike LaPointe.

White Pipe, Sr., a Sicangu Lakota was born in Wood on July 7, 1919 and was inducted into the U.S. Army on October 10, 1941. His late son, Elmer, who preceded him in death recently on June 9, once wrote about his dad. He said, "He was one of a few Lakota servicemen who were asked to use their native language to communicate with other service units while operating in and near Japanese held islands.., as a forward observer Pvt. White Pipe was part of a two-man team sent to forward observation areas where they dug into the terrain and established a radio base…once dug in, the team reported on enemy activity and provided coordinates for artillery shelling when required."

Charles White Pipe Sr., was known for his role in WW III as a code talker.

Senator John Thune (R-SD) issued a press release on June 28, also marking the occasion when he said, "I am saddened to hear of the passing of Charles White Pipe, Sr. I was inspired by the Code Talker's role during World War II and was honored to work to recognize their heroic duty during my time in Congress. I was deeply humbled while working with Charles White Pipe, Sr, and Clarence Wolf Guts and the families of the other Sioux Code Talkers."

White Pipe, Sr. attended Pierre Indian Boarding School and when he was in U.S. Army basic training, Pearl Harbor was attacked and he was shipped out. He was certified as a signalman and assigned to the 40th Division, 164th Field Artillery Battalion. After getting ill, he was hospitalized in New Guinea and eventually returned to Kansas by way of California and eventually was honorably discharged having served time in-country for one year and five days, and his foreign service totaled two years, one month and 23 days.

On Wednesday, June 28, Senator Tim Johnson also generously praised the accomplishments of White Pipe, Sr. when he delivered the following statement, in part, to the U.S. Senate. He said, "Mr. President, I rise to honor and recognize a true hero and a great American. Charles I. White Pipe, Sr. of Gregory, South Dakota passed into the spirit world at 7 p.m. on Monday evening. Mr. White Pipe, a Sicangu Lakota from the Rosebud tribe, valiantly served in the Army as a codetalker in World War II. He served as a "Forward Observer" on Japanese-held islands in the South Pacific, communicating by radio with a ship-based partner, using the Lakota language to direct artillery fire from ships at sea on the islands."

Survivors of White Pipe, Sr. include, children, Charles Jr., Lillian, Gayle, Gary, and Bryan. Son, Elmer preceded him in death.

Crow Creek High School's burned out dorm to be torn down

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) _ A dormitory destroyed by fire 14 months ago is finally coming down at the Crow Creek Tribal School in Stephan.

Scott Raue, the school superintendent, said the Bureau of Indian Affairs has approved demolition before the fall school term begins.

The shell of the old dorm is a safety hazard with the walls and roofing material crumbling and being blown around, he said.

Investigators weren't able to determine what started the fire in April 2005. Students escaped without injury.

The building was replaced by modular housing units that are being used as a dining hall and dorm.

White Clay beer blockade stalled; tribal police, activists to talk

PINE RIDGE, S.D. (AP) - After arguing on a dusty road that serves as the Nebraska-South Dakota boundary, two American Indians agreed Wednesday to try to find ways to stop the flow of beer from tiny Whiteclay, Neb., to the dry Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

The agreement negated a planned blockade aimed at stopping reservation residents from bringing in beer bought at four stores in Whiteclay.

Members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe who planned the blockade and James Twiss, acting police chief on the reservation, said they would try to meet _ possibly as early as Thursday.

Mark Vasina of Nebraskans for Peace, an activist group that has tried to end alcohol sales in the border town, said the day did not end like he thought it would but that he was pleased with the outcome.

``I think this is a success because we got a commitment from the new police chief to deal with the problems of illegal alcohol sales,'' Vasina said.

Sheriff Terry Robbins had a different take on the event: ``Waste of time,'' he said. The episode was just intended to draw media attention, he said.

Alcohol is banned on the 16,500-member reservation. But four stores in Whiteclay sell an estimated 4 million of cans of beer every year, mostly to Indians.

The stores have been a source of tension for years, and tribal members have tried to stop alcohol sales in Whiteclay through the courts, the county and the state licensing board.

Twiss told blockade organizer Duane Martin Sr. of the Strong Heart Civil Rights Movement that his officers could not allow the blockade because of safety concerns if a motorist chose not to stop.

Twiss said it was not clear whether the blockade would violate the constitutional rights of people against illegal searches and seizures.

``A person's vehicle is their property,'' Twiss told Martin.

Allowing the blockade would invite liability issues, Twiss said.

``I've just got to make sure that we're covered legally,'' he said. ``If someone decides not to stop, we're going to be responsible.''

``Whose side are you guys on?'' Martin asked Twiss.

``Don't try to make me be the bad guy,'' Twiss said.

Martin, who said he took on the blockade issue at the request of his people, kept pleading his case with Twiss, who grew up on the reservation and acknowledged he drank illegally in Whiteclay as a teenager.

For years the police department has not done enough to go after bootleggers who buy large quantities of beer in Whiteclay and then distribute it on the reservation, Twiss said. He said his department doesn't have the money or manpower to do more.

He vowed to work with Martin and others to find some way to ease the problem.

The two talked at the state boundary with the Shannon County, S.D., sign just a few feet away.

At least a dozen law enforcement vehicles were parked nearby. Tribal officers lined the gravel road, and just to the south, Nebraska State Patrol and Sheridan County officers stood by on the state highway going into Whiteclay.

A tribal police officer gave cold water and sports drinks to the other officers, who were in the hot sun.

It appeared that fewer than a dozen people showed up to support the blockade. More than a dozen reporters and photographers also were on hand.

Blockade supporters had said they didn't plan to arrest anyone but would confiscate any beer purchased in Whiteclay. The plan was to set up checkpoints just inside the reservation.

Volunteers in Whiteclay planned to use radios to tell checkpoint workers which vehicles should be stopped and searched for beer.

Sheriff Robbins said he doubted the blockade's legality because even if alcohol is banned on the reservation, it's still illegal to take it from somebody else. And anyone in Whiteclay radioing the description of vehicles to people at a blockade would be considered aiding and abetting a theft, Robbins said.

``It's still against the law to take anything from anybody,'' he said.

Republican U.S. House candidate Bruce Whalen of Pine ridge stopped by the gathering on his way to get his mail. He said the focus should be getting people off alcohol and getting them jobs because they'll just go somewhere else for beer.

``This is a dependent society, and we need to remove that dependency,'' Whalen said of government programs that provide most of the income on the reservation.

Also at the scene was Indian activist and actor Russell Means, who pulled his pickup and trailer out from the road on the state line and stopped it across the road into the reservation, indicating that it had stalled.

After an officer approached Means' pickup, there was some doubt it had mechanical problems.

``I'm not starting anything. I've got trouble here,'' Means told The Associated Press. ``I think it's overheated.''

Within a few minutes, someone brought jumper cables and Means' pickup started. He then drove away.

Panel upholds Crow Creek murder conviction

SIOUX FALLS (AP)-A federal appeals court panel has upheld the second-degree murder conviction and prison sentence James Allen Gregg received for a fatal shooting on the Crow Creek Indian Reservation two years ago.

Gregg, an Iraqi war veteran from Harrold, was sentenced to 11 years and three months for second-degree murder in the July 4, 2004, shooting of James L. Fallis, 26. The judge also gave Gregg the mandatory minimum 10-year sentence for using a firearm while committing a violent crime, with the two sentences to run one after the other.

A three-judge panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected Gregg's argument that the judge should have allowed the jury to hear testimony that Fallis had a reputation and history of being violent.

Such evidence could have been used to explain Gregg's state of mind at the time and could have shown that Fallis was the aggressor and that Gregg acted in self defense, according to his appeal.

Gregg was a member of a National Guard unit that was in Iraq for more than a year before returning in March 2004. He was suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder when he shot Fallis, according to testimony at his trial.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I want to leave my husband, his mother, his sisters and his brothers and his nephews and his neices and everybody and go live by myself with my baby. I am going nuts here.

What do you see?

Going Nuts

Dear Going Nuts:

You are not immobile. When the going gets too tough, the tough get going. I see you gone from there...gone, gone gone...yesterday's news by now I'd say.

Hang in there. Go investigate school and financing...child care...etc. Sometimes there are some apartments available in Kyle you could check into.

This just points out how very happy we will all be when housing becomes available at Oglala Lakota College. It will change the lives of many.

I hope someday at least one of those dormitories will be set up practically, reflecting a true need in the Indian community, allowing single women with children housing, somehow, someway, someday. All they need is money folks.

Dear Anna,

You told me you saw this guy that I'm with a while ago. You told me that I would meet him and I did. I thought he was my soul mate but we still have a lot of problems.

It's not that I don't love him, but he doesn't want to get married and I do. What now? Am I going to have to leave him because I want to be married and he doesn't? Is he going to be unfaithful to me because he is not committed to marrying me? Help!

Want to get married

Dear Want to Marry:

You're really doing okay girl, your just having an emotional hiccough right now.

He does love you, you do enjoy each other, there are always differences of opinion because no matter what the Hallmark cards say, your are only one in soul and in God, not really in mind.

You have to allow this man his differences, it doesn't mean he doesn't love you.

What I see him saying is that he doesn't really think about marriage right now. That's okay too. He doesn't have to marry you to be monogamous. Try not to have his children though, before marriage...it is just a little bit of a burden to do things that way.

Don't try to pressure or trap him. Just slow down a bit, look at your options, and he'll ask you to marry him when he feels like he makes enough money...that is just the way he thinks.

Good luck, pray for patience...and enjoy and love your life and being in love.

Dear Anna,

Today I am writing to you to ask a few questions first I wanted to ask if a baby is my near future. I know there are obstacles that say it's not the right thing now but in my heart it is. I know because of my husband's sickness he's endangering his own life and that's another reason I want a child so I will have that part of him with me.

We have been encountering some problems and I know it's because of his sickness. I encourage him to take care of himself but outside influences get to him. I am ready and willing to move and start our new life together but we have a few obstacles in our way, Do you see us moving within the next month or so?

Wondering

Dear Wondering:

There is a baby in your sort of near future - I see pregnancy probably by December 2007 (it looks to be that you are "pretty-well pregnant) at that time, with the baby probably being due in the early part of 2008. Outside influences are not getting to your husband - "inside" influences are. Strong people are not led astray, they go that way simply because they choose to and may have addiction patterns in behavior. In your accepting his illness, and the restrictions that apply to his behavior in order for him to remain well, then also accept that he is responsible for his own behavior . I do see you moving, probably around Halloween. The move is good for both of you. Good luck in dealing with the burdens you have decided to carry in order for this relationship to work.

Dear Anna,

Hello. I am a young, educated woman who has met a man that seems to suit me in every way; except, he only sees me as a friend. Sometimes, he sends off these vibes like he is interested in more and other times he barely notices me. He is a great guy. He is educated and well respected by all that know him. Do you see him and I being more than just friends? I don't want to confront him because it might ruin our friendship. I really enjoy your column and send you good thoughts and well being.

Tired of Waiting

Dear Tired of Waiting:

Just hang in their friend. He is "aware" of you as a woman but also has some fear regarding what an advance towards you might do to your friendship. I see the two of you finally coming together sometime near the middle or end of October. Just keep being wonderful, friendly, funny, brilliant and sexy - he can't help but notice. The two of you are well suited to each other. Patience is your only choice, and since you have prayed for patience the Creator is going to see that you develop them. Good luck and thank you for the kind words - they made my day!

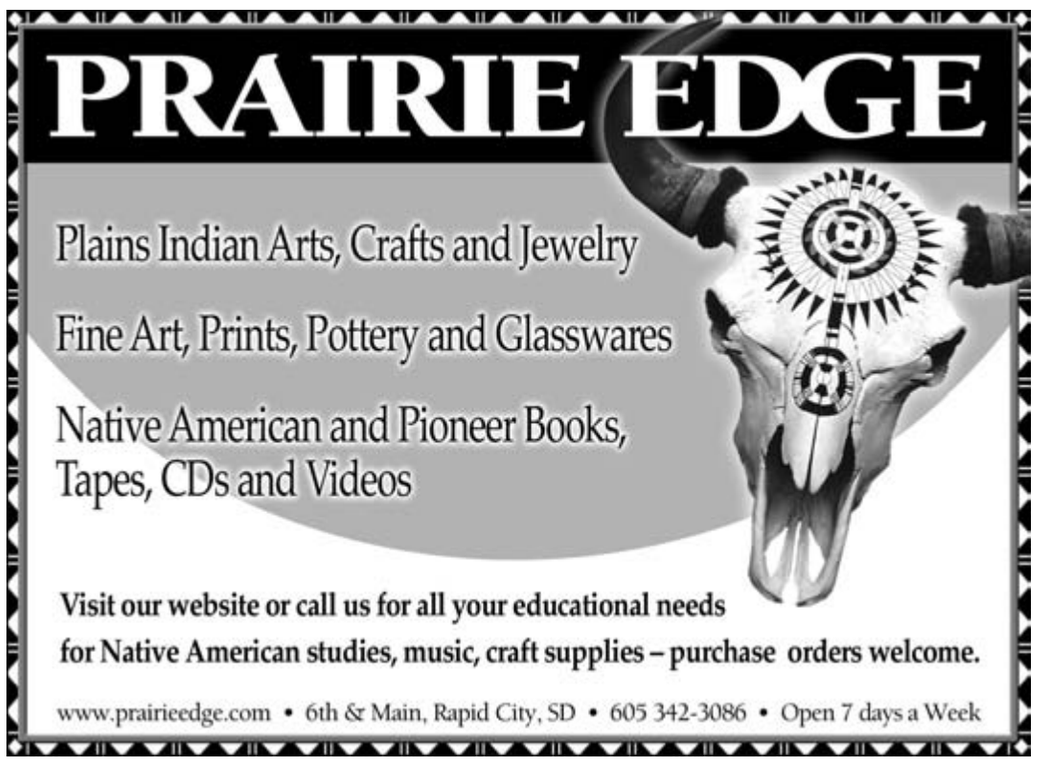
Dear Anna:

I am a 23 year old woman with two children. I had a boyfriend that hit me several years ago and knocked out two of my teeth. I don't drink and party, but my teeth make people think that I do. I work, but I feel held back at my job because of my appearance.

I have a boyfriend, but I know it won't work, but he is the only one that wants to date me because of how I look. What do you see for me?

Toothless and sad

Dear Toothless:



Please call the University of Colorado, Denver; I think it is now called Cranial Sciences - but in effect it is the dental school. It is more important that you get those teeth fixed than buy the new car you want.

They have a pretty reasonable fee schedule and they can help you. Let go of the man, being beautiful is an inside thing - and inside you are beautiful, and outside you are attractive with a little character in your smile.

Once you fix your smile, you can go ahead in life a little bit more easily. I wish that I could tell you that people don't react to missing teeth and other irregularities in appearance, but, for the exception of the elderly, people are filled with judgment. My heart goes out to you. God Bless Remembering Charles Whitepipe Sr.

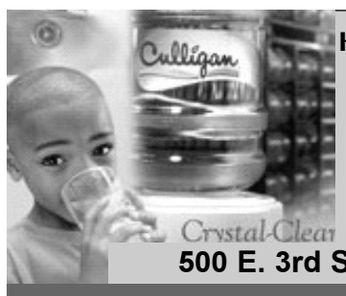
By Sen. John Thune (R-S.D.)
Washington, D.C.



Charles Whitepipe, Sr., a member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and a Sioux Code Talker in World War II, died June 26. Whitepipe, Sr. was one of the two living Sioux Code Talkers who then-Congressman Thune worked to recognize with the Congressional Gold Medal.

I am saddened to hear of the passing of Charles Whitepipe, Sr. I was inspired by the story of the Sioux Code Talkers' role during WWII and was honored to work to recognize their heroic duty during my time in Congress.

I was deeply humbled while working with Charles Whitepipe, Sr. and Clarence Wolf Guts and the families of the other Sioux Code Talkers. Their sacrifice and commitment to their country and their heritage saved the lives of many soldiers. My thoughts and prayers are with his family in this time of loss.

During WWII about a dozen known Sioux Indians were Army radio operators who used their native Nakota, Lakota, and Dakota dialects to transmit strategic messages.

Schools sue BIA, judge to rule this week

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - The Rosebud Sioux Tribe is watching closely a preliminary injunction hearing that was held on July 7, in Rapid City before Judge Karen Schrier in U. S. District Court. RST joined a number of other Sioux tribes a couple of weeks ago in filing a lawsuit against a planned restructuring of six BIA line offices that would effectively eliminate their presence in reservation communities and move them to Bismarck, N.D., Pierre and Rapid City.

The federal government will apparently rule later on in the week in the matter and a trial will be scheduled for later.According to a press release from the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association, a full day of testimony was heard, which included that of Ed Parisian, Deputy Director and former head of the Office of Indian Education Programs. Parisian was the primary architect for the planned restructuring. For the plaintiff tribes, Charles Abourezk along with Rebecca Kidder represented the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, Steve Emery represented the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe and Julian Brown represented the Lower Brule Sioux Tribe.

Of the hearing Abourezk said, "One of the biggest concerns is that after the restructuring, both North and South Dakota will not have any BIA personnel left on any of the reservations., We told the federal government that the restructuring plan will create more upper level bureaucrats and essentially leave the reservations and tribal schools without any local officials to provide technical and educational assistance."

Millions of liters of pop consumed on reservations, contributes to obesity

By Natasha D. Bordeaux
RST Diabetes Prevention Program Public Relations Specialist

ROSEBUD RESERVATION - Rosebud Reservation residents have consumed more three million liters of soda pop in the last year, according to a survey of several local businesses.

That is enough soda pop to fill nearly three Olympic-sized swimming pools!

Considering the survey only included eleven businesses that volunteered to participate (18 were invited) and did not include vending machine sales, concession sales, restaurant sales or sales made off the Reservation -- that is quite a bit of pop drinking for a population of only 20,000.

The survey was implemented and sponsored by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Diabetes Prevention Program in an effort to gauge the effect of sugar-laden drinks on the health of the local population. With the surveys, the RST DPP is now better able to assess the nutrition habits of the Rosebud Reservation communities as a whole.

The surveys included information about the amount of pop, diet pop, water, sports drinks and other bottled or canned drinks sold by each of the businesses. The information was collected for a 12 month period for each business.

It is a well known fact that pop consumption is a leading cause of excessive weight gain and obesity in the American population.

By Saturday and Sunday, the numbers had tapered off to normal as the shoppers represented a smaller number.

The store's corporate headquarters are located in Charlotte, N.C. and it has 6,000 stores located in 44 states. Local personnel are Antelope, Scott Herman sponsored the original resolution on June 22 on behalf of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

CRST tribal chairman, Harold Frazier testified, along with Deb Bordeaux of Loneman School. Dan Shroyer a current BIA line officer for Lower Brule, Crow Creek and Sisseton-Wahpeton also testified.

One of the major concerns has been the fact that the federal government has failed to consult with Great Plains tribes prior to initiating the restructuring. Abourezk said, "The OIEP promised tribes they would not use direct school funding to fund this restructuring in August 2005, yet in court they revealed their intentions to use at least $4 million dollars in 2006 operations funds to pay for part of this restructuring."

Frazier said, "The reorganization has to be halted and the cost must be used to provide better services for our children. Just building a bigger, top-heavy bureaucracy won't help."

prohibited from speaking directly to the press. However, an executive from Hot Springs who was onsite on Sunday and was at the store to train a local manager said that the first three days saw total sales of $39,000 dollars.

The first day, the store sold $19,000 dollars worth of goods.

St. Francis resident, Tyrone Big Crow, said that he was happy to see a local discount store that employed Lakota people. He said he had applied for a job at the Dollar General store in Valentine, Neb. and they had lost his application. A check of the store confirmed the fact that all employees were, indeed, local Sicangu Lakota workers.

On Wednesday night before the grand opening, the district manager for Family Dollar out of Rapid City noted that he would be emailing a statement detailing his expectations for the grand opening; however, it was not forthcoming.

He was asked again on Thursday about such a statement, but was too busy to produce it as he was in the middle of the flurry of activity during the grand opening.

The district manager noted that the Pine Ridge area is being considered as a potential site for a future Family Dollar store.

Eagle Butte, on the Cheyenne River Sioux reservation is another possibility for the franchise.

An email query was sent prior to the grand opening to the Family Dollar corporate headquarters in reference to the grand opening event, but there was no response. Family Dollar has a professional website that allows one to take a virtual tour of the store and each store is identical in its floor plan and layout.

Victoria Gunhammer of Rosebud and her mother, Dee Starboy of Mission also reported that they had shopped for an hour and a half in the store and spent quite a bit of money.

The store carries a range of household, automobile and personal goods presumably at a discounted rate. The new Family Dollar store is a nice convenience for local Rosebud reservation residents for as Big Crow noted, with increasing gas prices not everyone can travel out of the area to purchase such practical household goods.

Pop consumption

And because recent surveys show that over half of all children on the Rosebud Reservation are at-risk of developing Diabetes due to being over-weight or obese, the amount of pop these youth consume is directly related to the amount of excess calories they consume in the form of pop.

If the assumption is made that all the calories taken in from pop consumption over the last year are excess calories, then the local population would have gained 264,224 pounds of fat due to pop consumption alone in the last year. That is enough weight-gain for every man, woman and child on the Rosebud Reservation to have gained 13.2 pounds.

RST DPP Director Connie Brushbreaker believes that the Rosebud Sioux Tribe should make it a goal to drink less sugar-laden soda and increase the amount of water each person drinks.

"I challenge everyone to begin drinking eight glasses of water everyday. Drinking water is something everyone can do to improve their health. We know that drinking pop is a big contributor to the health problems we see here on Rosebud Reservation. If everyone made the commitment to drink more water, cut back on the pop they drink, or to switch to diet drinks we would see a significant improvement in the health of our people," Brushbreaker said.

Dr. Timothy Ryschon, pediatric physician for the RST Diabetes Prevention Program says it is unhealthy for almost anyone to gain 13.2 pounds in a year.

"Growing children normally gain weight as they grow and normal and safe amount of weight gain during the adolescent growth spurt is about five pounds per year. Any child gaining 13 pounds per year would become seriously overweight and would experience health problems directly related to being overweight," Ryschon said.

Ryschon comments that the effects of being overweight are of great concern for youth.

"The most concerning effect of excess body weight is the development of type 2 diabetes. Nationally, 80 percent of people with type 2 diabetes are seriously overweight. Diabetes isn't the only problem this extra weight creates - high blood pressure, cholesterol problems, and heart attacks are common in overweight people. Cancer, especially cancer of the breast, esophagus, kidney, uterus, and colon are caused by overweight. Children who become overweight commonly develop sleep apnea, caused by partial blockage of the windpipe; arthritis joint problems due to the extra load these joints must handle; gallbladder disease, and fatty liver disease, which pushes the liver towards failure. Many children and adults have these problems at Rosebud because they are overweight," Ryschon said.

Reaching the youth before they develop problems associated with overweight and obesity is the goal of the RST Diabetes Prevention Program.

The Youth Wellness Program screens all students in the local schools on the Rosebud Reservation from Head Start to 12th grade. All youth found to show health risk indicators such as; high Body Mass Index (height to weight ratio), Acanthosis Nigricans (a darkening of the skin due to insulin resistance), high blood pressure, or high waist-to-hip ratio are invited to participate in the Youth Wellness program. The RST Diabetes health care providers and fitness staff will work with each family to reduce those risk factors in each youth.

This school year (2005-2006) 788 youth were found to have risk-factors indicating they were at-risk for developing health problems. All 788 were invited to join the Youth Wellness Program.

Because type 2 diabetes is the fourth leading cause of death among Native Americans the local population is particularly at risk for developing type 2 diabetes if they do not change their nutrition for the better - which would mean significantly reducing the amount of pop they consume.

GORDON, NEB - For almost a year, Oglala Sioux from South Dakota's Pine Ridge Reservation and an ultra-orthodox Jewish family from New York City have partnered to start a kosher meatpacking plant in Gordon, Neb. Recently, they showed their progress to the community and, in the process, maybe got to know each other a little better.

Local Pride hosted a ribbon-cutting ceremony in its parking lot that featured a free lunch of grilled kosher hamburgers and hotdogs. Several hundred people, including plant workers, community officials, politicians and business leaders, ate under temporary awnings as Sholom Rubashkin, one of the plant's owners, mused about his family's latest business venture.

It's not the first small-town packing plant Rubashkin, his father and brother have opened. In 1989, they started a kosher plant called Agriprocessors in Postville, Iowa.

The family has excelled at producing kosher meats under the strictest Jewish laws, growing the Iowa plant from a handful of employees to more than 800.

The Rubashkins belong to a Hasidic Jewish community called the Lubavitchers, who scrupulously follow the Torah.

The Nebraska plant is also unique in its partnership with the Oglala Lakota Nation as the tribe has declared the plant and 300 surrounding acres of Gordon part of its economic empowerment zone.

For every person living within the zone it employs - Native or otherwise - the company qualifies for a $3,000 federal tax credit.

The company gets labor and tax breaks. But what does the tribe get?

"The goal of the empowerment zone designation is to reduce dependency," said David "Tally" Plume, executive director of the Oglala Oyate Woitancan Empowerment Zone. "You reduce dependency through job creation, education and homeownership."

Plant manager Gary Ruse said about 65 of the nearly 100 plant employees are Native American. He estimated about 15 percent of the work force is Latino and the remainder is Anglo.

Starting pay is $8.25 per hour without benefits. Ruse said the company plans to offer benefits as soon as it can.

Two highly trained rabbis perform the ritual kosher slaughter of each animal, which involves slitting its throat with a razor-sharp knife. One of the rabbis inspects the organs and lungs of the animal to determine if it qualifies as kosher.

The plant slaughters about 110 cattle per week, Ruse said. Until recently, all carcasses were quickly trucked to the Iowa plant for further processing, but the Gordon plant has just started to do some boning.

By soon adding two additional rabbis, the company hopes to double its daily slaughter.

The company got more help on the grand opening day when Gov. Dave Heineman presented a $505,000 check to Rubashkin on behalf of the city of Gordon.

Leaders of the northern Panhandle community of 1,800 - about 430 miles northwest of Lincoln - obtained the funds from the state's Community Development Block Grant program, said Gordon City Administrator Fred Hlava. The money represents a loan to help with plant expansion costs.

Gordon clearly stands to benefit if the plant succeeds, but so do surrounding cattle producers. Most of the cattle slaughtered at the plant have come from the region.

Global Volunteers help renovate Rosebud Boys and Girls Club

Students from Massachusetts private school experience diversity

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

MISSION - A group of 12 high school students and their three adult chaperones from Pingree School in South Hamilton, Massachusetts have signed on with "Global Volunteers" and arrived on the Rosebud to lend their volunteer efforts. The group chaperones are Anna McCoy, a history teacher, her father; Alan McCoy is the school's athletic director and Jim McLaughlin, who is an English teacher. Anna McCoy is no stranger to the Lakota as she spent some time on the Lake Traverse reservation.

Global Volunteers is an international organization which, in 1984, "Laid the foundation for what became know a decade later as "volunteer vacations", short term service opportunities in community development in host communities abroad." It has some 150 service teams year-around to work in 20 countries on six continents. In the United States, the Rosebud Sioux reservation is one community where the group works with Lakota people on a variety of labor projects.

Pingree School according to their website was founded as a girl's school in 1961 and went coed in 1971. As a private high school, it charges tuition and during the 2005-06 school year it was $26, 300. It has a student body of 350 students and a faculty of 50. The average class size is 15 students with a student-teacher ratio of 8:1. Their website reads, "The Pingree community is unique. With personal relationships and a shared sense of purpose, our students and faculty are proud that our campus feels more like a community than a high school."

The students were lending their hand doing a bit of renovation at the Boys and Girls Club of Rosebud, chipping off old tile, sorting out children's books and generally, helping where needed. During the Rosebud Casino powwow on July 3 and 4, they helped to get the powwow grounds in shape and were able to participate in a round dance. One of the students said that it was a great first-hand experience.

Homer White Lance was the contact person for Global Volunteers and provided an orientation for the group. He also arranged for the students and their chaperones to take part in the sweat lodge at the home of Albert White Hat, west of St.Francis.

A part of the group was sorting out a lot of children's books in the basement of the Boys and Girls Club building and paused for awhile to answer questions and to present some of their perspectives about their week's experience on the Rosebud. One student said that the Rosebud reservation was very beautiful and that the tall grass reminded her of the ocean. She also said that Lakota people are very generous and sharing. A male student said that there was a great contrast between Rosebud and their community as Sicangu people are very community oriented and their connection and relationship to each other is very evident. Yet, another student said that there has to be a solution to the unemployment situation on the Rosebud; the high numbers did not compare with the relative affluence that characterizes the student's background.

The group has been on the Rosebud for a week camping out at night on the grounds of the RST Veterans Affairs building and utilizing the showers and facilities. They reported that the camping was good, but some of them got wet when it rained. Earlier in the week, the group embarked on a sightseeing tour of the Badlands.

Last week, 12 students and their three adult chaperones spent a week on the Rosebud, helping to renovate the Boys and Girls Club of Rosebud. They also helped to prepare the powwow arena at the Rosebud Casino for the 4th of July powwow. The group was from a rather prestigious private school, Pingree School in Massachusetts. Three die in weekend accidents on Rosebud

MISSION - A father and daughter were killed before midnight in a three vehicle accident on U.S. highway 83 north of Mission and south of White River. Daryl Peneaux, age 43, and his daughter, Maria Peneaux, 21, of Mission were killed when their van was hit by a pickup truck pulling a race car. The pickup truck driving north side swiped the Peneaux van when it swerved to miss a deer crossing the road.

The pickup was driven by David Murray of Oberlin, KAN and his wife, Nikki and their daughter. They apparently were not seriously injured. After striking the Peneaux vehicle the pickup and trailer then spun around and hit a third vehicle. The occupants of that vehicle were not hurt and escaped from their vehicle before it went up in flames.

Murray is a three three-time national champion car racer. Alcohol is not believed to be a factor in the accident which remains under investigation.

In an early Sunday morning accident near Two Strike, Jarrod Bordeaux, 22, was killed when the car he was in attempted to pass another vehicle. Bordeaux and a passenger, Terry Eastman, were ejected from the vehicle. Alcohol was believed to be a factor in the accident.

Lakota code talker Wolf Guts honored at Washington

WANBLEE - Sen. Tim Johnson and Sen. John Thune, of South Dakota honored Clarence Wolf Guts during the National Indian Education Association's Native Languages Legislative Summit in Washington, D.C. this week. Thune and Johnson both presented Wolf Guts with a star quilt and spoke about his courageous efforts as a Sioux Code Talker during World War II.

"The star quilt presented today is a small form of appreciation for the hard work and dedication shown by Clarence Wolf Guts, and his fellow Code Talkers. By their willingness to serve our country, they empowered the Allies in World War II with strong communication that was secure and secret from our enemies," Johnson said.

Originally from Red Leaf, Wolf Guts speaks Lakota and enlisted in the United States Marine Corps in his late teens. Wolf Guts did not know of the code talker training when he was asked to participate. He then went on to serve several years before returning to South Dakota.

During World War II, Code Talkers included Lakota, Dakota and Nakota speakers serving in the 3rd Battalion and the 302nd Reconnaissance Team of the First Cavalry Division. At least 17 Native American tribes have had identified Code Talkers in both World War I and World War II. The use of Code Talkers thwarted the efforts of the Axis Powers to intercept messages, as the syntax and tonal qualities of the native languages were so complex that no message transmitted by any code talker was ever decoded by the Axis Powers.

Clarence Wolf Guts, the last Lakota Code talker, was honored at a national education conference this week.

"During World Ware II, Clarence Wolf Guts transmitted sensitive military information in Lakota that confounded the enemy's attempts to compromise our military's communications," said Thune. "The efforts of Mr. Wolf Guts and his fellow Code Talkers saved the lives of many of our soldiers and helped lead us to victory. The story of the Code Talkers is an inspiration to us all, and, as a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee, I have been honored to work to recognize their heroic duty."

Wolf Guts is the last surviving Lakota Code Talker from World War II.

Lakota Country Times moving to be a weekend edition

The Lakota Country Times is moving its weekly publication deadline up one day to Wednesday from its original Tuesday deadline.

Our future editions are meant to resemble more of a 'weekend edition' as much of the news that we cover is assembled and finalized during the early part of the week. Many institutions and agencies also submit their news and advertisements during this time and an additional day for that process to occur will allow us to be more responsive to our patrons.

Those subscribers on our mailing list, as well as those schools who have purchased subscriptions for their parents will now receive their newspaper a day later also.

We will also be working with Rushmore News to deliver our paper on their weekly route and we believe that their proven efficiency will allow readers to purchase their copy at a set time each week.

This helps our company with the rising cost of fuel. We would ask that our subscribers notify our office if there appears to be any irregularity in the receipt of your copy.

The Lakota Country Times greatly appreciates those patrons and institutions which have been supportive of the paper, in the last year and half since we started publishing, our readership has grown from an estimated 1,000 to about 8,000.

The relationship we have enjoyed with our readers has been mutually beneficial.

Many adhere to the notion that Lakota owned enterprises should be supported by other Lakota programs, businesses and governments and to that end it helps us to keep Lakota people informed of news and advertisements which impact their lives weekly.

The business world is rather competitive and many small businesses experience a bit of turbulence as we compete for the same advertisement dollar.

We at the Lakota Country Times support the philosophy that Lakota people endeavor to remain strong in our culture and language as it will help our future generations.

We will continuue to promote our philosophy in being objective and promoting intergrity.

This year we have enhanced our online edition to share our successes with the mainstream communities.

Beginning next week, July 20, we will be out on the stands on Thursday and Friday on Pine Ridge and Rosebud, instead of Wednesday and Thursday.

In Lakota we would express our appreciation as, "Ptala unki najin hantas hecela upiya un nipi'kte. Le wowapi ki Lakota ewazapi ca dakomni wotanla unwooglakapi."

Thoughts that come from the heart

How much do we really know?

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

In the newspaper publishing business, the type of information we market our readers is what makes our newspaper and portrays who we are.

By the same token, the type of information we personally integrate into our belief system makes us who we are, and we live accordingly to those beliefs.

Recently, the Oglala Lakota Nation became embroiled in the abortion debate that South Dakotans will soon decide the fate of through the voting process. The issue divided us not only in government but in our communities. What is right and what is wrong? It stems from our own belief systems and how we live those beliefs.

Most of our beliefs come from our primary caregivers, which are most likely the ones who raised us and provided the information that aided in our development.

Our make up structure also comes from our communities and from environment. We also get information daily from the mass media that is a part of our lives. We watch television, listen to the radio, listen to the words in music, read literature like magazines and newspapers and from Internet. We get our information from our family, friends and from the gossip circle. No matter who we get that information from, it becomes a part of us and how we let it become a part of us is up to our belief system.

The point is, is that we alone have to provide a filter for all the information that flows our way. We have a responsbility to examine particular issues and then, make up our own minds as to its truthfulness and relevancy to our lives. There are many people who do not pick up a newspaper, and that certainly is their prerogative, and that is why we need to be redundant and repetitive when we inform people about everything from the ills of drug and alcohol use to the potential effects of the bird flu.

It is so important for organizations, governments, schools and businesses to have good public relations department no matter what size. How we promote our image is important to what we promote, even as a business. I am learning that imagery and marketing is very important to being successful.

Recently I attended the latter part of the impeachment hearing on Cecelia Fire Thunder and in the audience was the media, the local media and the mainstream media. They come and take our stories and how they promote them out in the world is what the world sees of us. That's not a bad thing but it hurts us in a sense that sometimes it feeds to that stereotypical image that is often portrayed of us. Some people know how to blow their horn and they learned how to use the media to get their agendas across to the public, thus, they developed their public relations.

I truly believe that if our tribal governments and institutions want change, they have to keep their communities informed and updated. Communication is the key to success and that is important in all aspects of our lives. Especially now, there is many different forms of communication vehicles available to do so. When we have accurate information, we are more apt to feel secure in our beliefs.

So here is something on how much do we really know regarding contraceptives. Recently the associate press had an article out on Plan B, which is considered a morning after contraceptive and is considered an emergency contraceptive and the way it works is it uses a high dose of hormones found in birth control pills. It's designed to prevent a fertilized egg from implanting in a woman's uterus if taken within 72 hours of unprotected sex and will not have any affect once the egg is embedded in the uterus wall. It works almost the same way trilevlen works, which is considered an emergency oral contraceptive method also. Most of the time these are prescribed and taken in case of emergency when a woman goes through assault or wants to make sure she is not pregnant after unprotected sex.

Another form of contraceptive that is designed to prevent implantation is the IUD. The Intraunterine Device is a small T-shaped device inserted into the uterus and prevents preganancy by stopping the sperm and the egg from meeting or by preventing a fertilized egg from implanting in the womb.

Most pharmacies in South Dakota, including Indian Health Service, sell these sort of contraceptives, if they can be considered contraceptives.

The definition of contraceptives is a device used to prevent fertilization of the egg but yet these contraceptives can actually prevent a fertilized egg from implanting.

In researching these facts, I was surprised to know how the IUD works as I used it for family planning and did not know how it worked.

I was just told at the Indian Health Service that it was a contraceptive and I never thought to ask the details of how it worked, I just trusted my midwife that it was a contraceptive.

Sure, it is a proven contraceptive and

South Dakota's abortion ban: no mercy for victims of rape and incest

By Chas Jewett member of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribal member and a member of Democracy in Action, a South Dakota women's political action committee in Rapid City, South Dakota

Recently, volunteers from the South Dakota Campaign for Healthy Families announced they had collected over 38,000 signatures on a petition to repeal the extreme abortion ban signed by Governor Rounds on March 21st.

The fact that almost 5 percent of the state's population signed the petition strongly suggests that South Dakotans believe in compassion, mercy, and the rights of women, families, and communities to make decisions for themselves.

Many of those who signed the petition no doubt did so in reaction to an abortion ban that does not even make an exception for women who are victims of rape or incest.

Many people already know that rape and incest are not the primary reason why most women have abortions.

Nevertheless, people are deeply offended because the ban sends the message that the state does not take seriously the pervasive violence in women's lives.

The state has, in effect, said that rather than working to understand and end that violence, the state will make it worse for those women who happen to get pregnant as a result of it.

The ban then, isn't just about abortion; it is about a state that makes violence against women a sideshow to the abortion controversy.

Proponents of South Dakota's abortion ban, including Representative Roger Hunt have tried to hide the extraordinary cruelty of the ban, by saying that women need not worry because they can still have access to emergency contraception. (EC taken within 72 hours of unprotected sex or birth control failure significantly reduces the likelihood a woman will get pregnant).

First, this answer shows again a complete disregard for the lives, health, and safety of women who have been subjected to the violence of rape.

By definition, victims of such events have experienced trauma and are very likely, in our culture, to feel embarrassment, shame and fear. As a result some will not seek help right away.

Suggesting that the State of South Dakota cares about these women --but only if they can manage to seek help within the first 72 hours - reveals a disregard for women's lives and health that many South Dakotans just don't think is right or fair.

Second, and even more telling, is the fact that South Dakota has done virtually everything it can to limit women's access to Emergency Contraception. South Dakota's legislature was one of the first in the country, in 1998, to enact a law permitting pharmacists to refuse to fill prescriptions for contraceptives. According to state law, if a woman is trying to fill a prescription for emergency contraception, she may be turned down by her pharmacist.

In the most recent legislative session in which the abortion ban passed, South Dakota legislators refused to ensure that our children receive comprehensive sex education that would include information about abstinence and about such precautions as emergency contraception. Even more on point, the legislature that passed the ban on abortion defeated a bill that would have required health care facilities to provide oral and written information about emergency contraception to female rape survivors who come in as patients.

So South Dakota legislators not only prohibit pregnant rape survivors from choosing abortion, they are also depriving them of essential information about the one contraceptive method that could prevent the pregnancy in the first place.

So if proponents of the abortion ban claim that they do care about women and don't want to close every door to help - why then are they passing laws that deprive women of the information they need to access emergency contraception?

Finally, it should not come as a surprise that the legislature that outlawed abortion wants next to outlaw emergency contraception itself. The South Dakota Task Force to Study Abortion that laid the groundwork for the abortion ban also concluded (without scientific basis) that emergency contraception medications "can act as early abortifacients."

If contraceptives are relabeled abortions -- then it is just a simple step for the South Dakota legislature to block access to both abortion and the contraceptives that reduce the need for abortions.

The ban signed by Governor Rounds isn't just about abortion, it's about contraception and it is about how we value women and mothers.

By supporting the petition to repeal the abortion ban, the people of South Dakota are sending a message that the legislature should focus its energy on stopping violence against women rather stopping women from accessing the health care they and their families need.

The 'circle' is the way to teach about conflict

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

When you hear of the continuing conflict and tensions in the world today, there is no understanding the nature of it. That is, the 'why' of it is often unclear. Material possessions, jealousy, revenge, territoriality, and ethnic cleansing are just some of the reasons that people fight. It makes you wonder if 'tunkasila' ordained it that conflict would always be a part of life, just as much as peace and harmony is.

Actually, we know that you cannot have day without its companion darkness, and evil will always be a part of good in the world. We know that, but what we don't know is why is has to be that way.

We don't teach that concept to Lakota children and I believe we need to so that they will be prepared to live in a world that characterized by both good and bad, peace and tension.

Witness the fact the ongoing tensions in the world where one nation will not back down until many have paid the price. In Vietnam, we were willing to pay the ultimate price and in the end, we said it was okay if communism were installed in the country after we left. Now, the country is a trading partner.

Lakota children need to understand that conflict and hatred come in many forms and colors. There is no school curriculum that introduces children to such things. Our elder numbers are beginning to diminish and it is up to us to pass on such things. If children and young adults were introduced to the idea of conflict early, they will know that life is not always good, but also filled with pitfalls.

We don't tell young people that as they pursue their career or work, that invariably someone just may be jealous and work to get them discredited or infringe on their career path. Those kinds of personal conflicts are things we simply do not share with young people, and they are being short changed.

We need to tell them now why there is conflict over the Black Hills and Bear Butte. We need to explain that our runaway unemployment rate is something we are unable to fix and we would rather continue on our way of being dependent.

Many organizations follow philosophies, vision statements, and outcomes which are noble and generous, yet they cause oppression to the people they serve.

The organizations are not problematic; it is the people who work in them who simply rubber stamp the mission of the organization.

Again, such action is very complex and do not lend itself to analysis as it is easier simply to tag along for the ride. Paycheck to paycheck is not a bad way to live, but in the end we give up something if we accept the status quo and do not move a finger to ask 'why.'

As individuals we are the same. We cause interpersonal conflicts without taking the time to see what 'reactions' our 'actions' create.

We know as physicists know, that there is an equal reaction for every action that occurs in nature and this also applies to humanity. I believe that Lakota people knew that, for that is the reason they spoke of the 'circle.' For the circle of relatives could theoretically be disturbed if any one of its members were in conflict or hurt by another.

There is much more to discuss and continue to learn about the 'circle' that spills over into contemporary life.

Lakota youngsters will continue to be assaulted by conflict and tension and we need to propose discussions, curriculums, and lectures which will enlighten them about the need to minimize such things. Sometimes, those oppressors live amongst us but our eyes will not let us see

Sharing a birthday beyond the seventh decade

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

I have something in common with the great concert pianist and virtuoso, Van Cliburn. He won a piano competition in Texas when he was 12 years old. That same year I failed miserably in my efforts to play "Chopsticks" on an aging piano at Holy Rosary Indian Mission on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota.

So what do we have in common? We were both born in the wee hours of July 12, 1934. This week we both turned 72 years of age. I doubt very seriously if Van Cliburn knows about me, but by virtue of our birth dates I have followed his illustrious career from its outset.

We were born the year of the Indian Reconciliation Act of 1934. This was an Act of Congress to allow Indian tribes to establish a Constitution and to hold free elections in a lesson in self-government. Of course, most tribes practiced a form of democratic rule long before 1934 and long before they received Congressional approval to do what they had always done.

Many tribal elders referred to the IRA governments as "New Deal governments" and some of the tribes such as the Navajo Nation, refused to endorse the Act. My tribe, the Oglala Lakota (Sioux) ratified the Act in July of 1934. I don't suppose Van Cliburn showed much interest in this piece of legislation that changed the complexion of Indian country forever.

We were born on the cusp of the Great Depression and Great Dust Bowl of the 1930s. We rode in Model A Fords and saw the airplane go from a two-winged fence jumper to powerful jets that could fly three times the speed of sound. We witnessed the mushroom clouds that darkened the skies over Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

While Van Cliburn was winning piano concert awards in Texas in the 1940s, I was playing war games and cursing Adolph Hitler and Tojo with my boyhood friends at the Indian mission boarding school on the reservation.

He was 17 when he entered Julliard, a school for outstanding performers, and I was 17 when I enlisted in the United States Navy. While Van Cliburn was sniffing the perfumed air of Carnegie Hall, I was freezing in the winter and swatting flies the size of hummingbirds in Korea.

As you can see, aside from the coincidence of our birthdays, Van Cliburn and me had very little in common, although we were both on this planet earth when so many events happened that shook the world.

In our 72 years on this earth we saw manned space flight and we saw men walk on the moon. We saw a war in Vietnam that tore a nation down the middle. While Van Cliburn was watching the collapse of mighty Enron in his native Texas, I was watching the rise of an Indian gaming empire that grossed $23 billion in 2005. What he saw was the rich fall while I saw the poor rise.

I am sure there are many things both of us will miss and things that we will remember that encompassed these many years. There were times when this Nation was at peace during our stay. But it seems that most of the time we have been at war.

I remember when I first fell in love, or at least I thought it was love. I was a sophomore at Holy Rosary Indian Mission and I had worked up the courage to ask Arlene Clifford to dance with me at one of our high school Sodality Dances. In my young mind, Arlene was one of the most beautiful Lakota girls I had ever seen. When I put my hand on her waist and took her hand in mine I was shaking so badly and my heart was pounding so loudly that I was just sure that I had embarrassed myself beyond redemption. I think it was just last year that I discovered that all teenage boys go through this excruciating experience.

On the morning of July 12 I will miss that phone call I got every year on my birthday. My daughter Roberta always called me very early in the morning and she would say, "Hey Dad, rise and shine and enjoy a beautiful day on your birthday." Roberta died in an automobile accident in April.

I think Van Cliburn will agree with me that when one lives to be 72 he loses many friends and relatives. In my immediate family that once had seven children, only three of us remain. I have seen my parents, brothers, sisters and many aunts, uncles and cousins pass away in this lifetime. And many of my boyhood friends from my school days at Holy Rosary have made that journey to the Spirit World. And there's not a day goes by when I don't see the name of someone I watched at the movies of my youth listed in the obituary columns of the newspapers.

But aside from that gloom, I think that life has been wonderful. From my birthplace on the Pine Ridge Reservation I have traveled to most of the great cities in this world and I have gone from sitting on the banks of Kyle Dam on the reservation to sitting on the banks of the Charles River at Cambridge.

I have stood at the podiums of universities and colleges like Harvard, UCLA, Illinois, South Dakota State University, MIT, Florida A&M, Bacone College, Nebraska Indian Community College, Nebraska, Colorado and Dine' Community College on the Navajo Nation, to speak to the students about current events in Indian country.

I also started the first successful independent Indian owned weekly newspaper in the United States 25 years ago and that newspaper, Indian Country Today, is still a successful newspaper.

I was reading an article about Van Cliburn recently and I found that there are still some things we have in common aside from our birthdays. He said he was happy with the course his life has taken and there is very little he would have done differently and I feel the same way.

Happy Birthday Mr. Van Cliburn and I hope the both of us have many, many more.

Indigenous peoples still lack human rights

By Charmaine White Face
Teton Sioux Nation Treaty Council

On Thursday, June 29, 2006, an announcement was made that the United Nations Human Rights Council had passed the Declaration on the Human Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

Those of us who have been attending the debates for many years did not immediately jump for joy.

Instead, we wanted to know which Declaration was approved: the original Sub-commission text or the Chair's text. Sadly, it was the Chair's text. Even the words used to proclaim the Declaration did not proclaim a Declaration.

"Solemnly proclaims the following United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples as a standard of achievement to be pursued in a spirit of partnership and mutual respect, ".

It is this phrase, "to be pursued", that tells us we must still continue to seek, or 'pursue' our Human Rights. This phrase was inserted by the Chair of the Working Group on the Draft Declaration, Luis Chavez from Peru, and did NOT have consensus from the Working Group at any of the meetings.

The same Preambular Paragraph 19, the one that DID have consensus from many Indigenous peoples and Nation-state diplomats during the creation of the Declaration, the one originally stated in the Sub-commission text read:

"Solemnly proclaims the following United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples:"

This is the correct way to proclaim a declaration and was approved by two, yes two, United Nations bodies: the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, and the Sub-commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, which is now the Sub-commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights. These two bodies passed what came to be known as the Sub-commission Text twelve years ago, in 1994. That was after ten years, that began in 1984, of working with hundreds of Indigenous peoples to write the Declaration as a draft that would include actual human rights!

After twenty-two years of working on finally establishing human rights for Indigenous peoples, since we were forgotten or deliberately excluded from the so-called Universal Declaration on Human Rights which was approved at the UN in 1949, the new UN Human Rights Council should have looked at the history of their own committees, rather than hastily accept the words of one man, Luis Chavez.

In essence, Luis Chavez has struck down all the work of twenty-two years by the two committees, by Indigenous delegates, and by representatives of the Nation-States who really believed the UN system could work. One man, Luis Chavez, has denied Human Rights to the 350 million Indigenous peoples of the world.

This danger was foreseen two years ago when six Indigenous representatives held a Hunger Strike-Prayer Fast in the meeting room at the UN in Geneva because Luis Chavez had said he was only going to submit his 'Chair's Text' to the Commission on Human Rights.

The Hunger Strike-Prayer Fast was successful in insuring that the Sub-commission text would also be submitted. Instead of making a decision, even though encouraged to at that time by several members of the Commission, the work on the Draft was extended for another year, making it eleven years of debates instead of ten, and then the Commission was abolished. This left the decision to the new UN Human Rights Council.

If this most recent action by the new UN Human Rights Council is any indication of the kinds of decisions that are going to be made, which disregard decades of work and recommendations by their own committees, then where can Indigenous nations and peoples go with Human Rights violations?

It is true that Russia and Canada (speaking also for the United States, Australia, and New Zealand) voted against the adoption of this Declaration. Their reasons for going against this Declaration, and ours are totally different. Yet, in this one instance we do agree that this Declaration should not have been adopted. It gives false hope to the most marginalized peoples and nations of the world.

What can be done? Complaints can be filed with the UN Human Rights Council, and with the High Commissioner for Human Rights, Louise Arbour. Will they do anything? I don't know but they must be made aware that not all Indigenous peoples are content to stand by any longer without any real human rights. Voices must be loudly raised before this so-called Declaration is taken to the UN General Assembly for approval in September. Indigenous peoples, and hopefully anyone concerned that Human Rights are available to all peoples, must speak up to stop this travesty. No Human Rights are available for Indigenous nations and peoples at this time. No Human Rights for Indigenous nations and peoples will be available in the future if this most recent "Declaration" is universally accepted. This is a mockery of Human Rights that must not be allowed to continue.

can prevent the sperm and the egg from meeting but also it is a fact that sometimes it doesn't prevent that and fertilization will happen but it will prevent implantation of the fertilized egg to the lining of the uterus.

It does that as it changes the lining and if the egg becomes fertilized, it has doesn't have the safety of the uterus wall to attach to.

So the question here is when conception takes place when the egg and sperm meet and fertilization happens, are the combined cells a life or is it a life when it actually implants in the uterus wall? So if fertilization happens and that small matter doesn't get a chance to implant on the uterus wall because of the effects of emergency oral contraceptive pills or because the T-shaped IUD prevents the fertilized egg from implanting, did we as a woman abort our baby?

That is the importance if acquiring information and using it to according to our beliefs.

So if a we want a strong government, or if we want a strong, structured family life, then we acquire and use information as we need to, to make change.

Youth participate in fun days in learning about health

ROSEBUD -- Hoping to help local youth make healthy changes that could prevent them from encountering health problems in the future, Rosebud Sioux Tribe Diabetes Prevention Program sent out 788 invitations to a Welcoming Fun Day at Ghost Hawk Park Saturday, June 17.

The 788 youth from all Rosebud Reservation Schools were selected based on the results of a school health screening that measured factors like height, weight, Body Mass Index (BMI), blood pressure, the presence of Acanthosis Nigricans (a darkening of the skin due to insulin resistance), and waist circumference to hip circumference ratio. The youth were selected from a pool of 1,524 screened students.

Those youth found to have one or more risk factors, including a BMI in the 90th percentile or higher, high blood pressure, AN, or a high waist-to-hip-circumference ratio, were invited to join the Youth Wellness Program and attend the Welcoming Fun Day Event. Over half of all students screened were found to be at risk for health problems.

The Welcoming Fun Day was planned as a way to introduce the youth and their families to the RST DPP Youth Wellness Program. The event began at 10 a.m. and went through 5 p.m. Healthy snacks including fresh fruit trays, water and veggies trays were served throughout the day. A healthy lunch of lean meat sandwiches, diet soda and baked chips was served to all who attended.

While only a handful of those invited actually showed up to the event, RST Diabetes Prevention Program Director Connie Brushbreaker said she is pleased with the outcome.

"I am very happy with the way things turned out. Those that showed up showed they are committed to their children and their health. We know those youth will be likely to adopt a healthier lifestyle through the help of the Youth Wellness Program," Brushbreaker said.

The goal of the Youth Wellness Program is to monitor the health of local youth found to be at-risk for health problems, teach them healthier ways to approach their diet and to provide guided exercise opportunities for the youth.

Once they are in the program the youth will work with RST DPP pediatric physician Tim Ryschon and nurse Buffy Grimshaw on reducing their risk factors and improving their diet. They will also work with Fitness Specialist Marc Marshall and the team of fitness assistant on implementing exercise routines.

During the summer, the youth have the opportunity to attend day camps on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The day camps offer fun fitness opportunities like kickball, baseball, golf, nature hikes, swimming, games and races. The afternoons are often a little more laid back with activities like fishing or swimming. Each day healthy snacks of fresh fruit and water are offered. Healthy lunches are provided to teach the youth how to incorporate healthy choices into their active lifestyles.

"Those youth that received invitations to the Welcoming Day that didn't attend are still welcome to join the Youth Wellness Program. It's important that we get these kids involved in healthy lifestyles now while they are still forming their life habits. That way their health becomes a priority before health problems have the opportunity set in. Youth and their parents that want to join the Youth Wellness Program just need to call us at 747-4600 and set up an appointment for the Youth Wellness Clinic," Brushbreaker said.

Any parents and guardians that are concerned about their child's health or risk of acquiring health problems like type 2 diabetes or heart disease can enroll their child in the Youth Wellness Program by request. Call 747-4600 for more information.

Stacey Two Eagle, RST DPP Fitness Assistant, gets a work out as she demonstartes to on-looking youth how to "stretch" the huge rubberband on one of the many fun attractions at the Welcoming Fun Day.

Bear Butte NOT a battle camp:

Activities planned, including treaty rights training

BY NATALIE HAND AND DEB WHITE PLUME
Owe Aku, Bring Back The Way

STURGIS — On July 4, we declared our own sort of independence. We performed a icicuse (making a vow) ceremony to commit ourselves to the protection of our sacred Mato Paha. Many elders from various nations came to speak and share their wisdom and oral history about the significance of Mato Paha.

Throughout the day, we shared stories, laughter, and food. It was a beautiful day. Everyone worked together and spoke of good, positive things…the way it should be.

The proof lies in our children's smiles and laughter. They are at peace here. They sleep well and know that they are safe here.

Contrary to some gossip, this is NOT an armed camped. We are NOT planning a "battle" with the people of Sturgis. This began as a peaceful encampment. Since that first day, it has changed somewhat. We have had several young men hambleyca on Mato Paha from our camp. Now it is truly a spiritual camp. This camp is drug and alcohol free and tokala society is present to ensure everyone's safety.

We have erected a "cook shack" for all in our in camp to come together and share meals together. Our commitment is to minimize waste and leave this place as we found it, clean. Therefore, we use re-useable hard plastic dishes/utensils/cups and keep our camping areas clean. This temporary encampment is not only beneficial to stop the desecration, but also to teach our children and ourselves how to respect Mother Earth again.

The organizers have created a loose schedule that will include weekend activities, such as treaty rights training, traditional food training, tipi raising workshop, beading/quillwork training, hand games, elders talking circles, etc.

Tentative Schedule

Please come and join us. Come prepared to stay a day, a week, or the duration!

If you camp, please bring your own tipi/tent, bedroll, (reusable) dishes, chairs, etc. and whatever you want to share.

We are extremely grateful to Rosebud Sioux Tribe for use of the land and facilities at Bear Butte Lodge. Also, wopila to the Oglala Sioux Tribe for the donation of buffalo meat. The Cheyenne River Sioux and other tribes will also be contributing to support this effort. Most important, we must thank our elders for their encouragement, wisdom and prayers.

Camp out aims to relieve grief with community support, prayer

NATASHA D. BORDEAUX
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - In an effort to help release the Sicangu Oyate of their burdens of grief and loss the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Alcohol Program along with several other programs collaborated to create a two-day camp retreat on Thursday, July 6 and 7 at the backyard of the RST Alcohol and Drug Treatment Facility in Rosebud.

The event was called the Sicangu Oyate Wiconi Yukeni Campout, which translates in English to mean, "reawakening of the good life of our people" camp-out.

Camp organizers invited the public to attend saying "The camp-out is a time to bring our people and communities together in a good way to acknowledge and show respect for the many different ways and reasons we are grieving. Whether it be death, suicide, break-up, illness or other loss, each one of us has had our burden of hardship to bear."

During the camp, each morning a spiritual walk was held from a sacred site to the camp site. Photo courtesy of Natasha D. Bordeaux.

The camp-out featured several speakers that lead discussions on traditional ways of healing from grief, to traditional roles of male and females. It also included activities like hand games, open mic, story-telling, talking circles, sweat ceremonies and a wiping of the tears ceremony.

Each morning began with prayers and a spiritual walk from a local sacred site to the camp site. The RST Diabetes Prevention Program provided a healthy brunch of fruit and water and helped with the walks.

RST Alcohol Program Director Marcida Eagle Bear called upon the local programs to get together to see what they could do to help the people get through many of the recent tragedies, deaths and suicides that have happened locally in the last few months.

Collaborators soon realized that they would have to address not only recent events but grief and hardship that some people may have been carrying for years.

The camp was designed to be a free-flowing, unscheduled and open event which would safely and positively allow the public to address and release much of the grief they have been carrying. All Rosebud Sioux Tribal Employees were granted leave to attend the event if they chose.

The ending of the event was marked by a wiping of the tears ceremony offered to the public by local spiritual leaders.

Youth photographic art exhibit July 13 at Pine Ridge

PINE RIDGE - On Thursday, July 13, there will be an art exhibit of works by youth from a four state area, at 6 p.m. at the Billy Mills Hall.

The Exposure Art Exhibit, Visions of Life, has coordinated a gallery of photography and art by youth from South Dakota, Arizona, New York and Vermont.

John Willis, who helps coordinating the project said all are welcome and there will be some food and drink available.

The group has been in Pine Ridge the last three weeks and have been working with a group of youth from the Pine Ridge area. Other youth in the group are from the South Bronx of New York and Vermont and from the Navajo Nation and they came here to Pine Ridge to work with area youth.

Willis said the art is of a photographic nature in different forms and what they have will be on display on Thursday evening. There will also be a slide show that evening. The group has worked on photographic quilts and one is currently hanging in Big Bats.

"We are hoping to have a couple of slide shows going in the room. These are done by youth of the four states. The work is not only from this year but from last year, last year we had 60 youth and we have a smaller number this year," he said. This is the fourth year the group has came to Pine Ridge.

The traveling group is 24, from the three states and during the week, they worked with area youth on photography and on weekends do some camping and traveling.

"We use old fashioned cameras and digital cameras and 19 century photographic projects. We use photography to show art communicates. We do some writing and mask making and Navajo crafts like weaving. We also try and take them to learn about Lakota culture.

He said the group has in previous years worked with youth at the Boys and Girls Club and at Red Cloud Indian School.

RST Diabetes Prevention Program Day Camp, July 13 & 18

ALL local youth are invited to attend a fun day camp sponsored by the RST Diabetes Prevention Program. Hiking and swimming activities are tentatively scheduled for Thursday, July 13. Golf and swimming activities are tentatively scheduled for Tuesday, July 18. Call 747-4600 before coming to confirm activities. Arrive at RST DPP office before 10 a.m. Participants will be transported to and from activities. A healthy lunch will be served.

Diabetes Prevention Youth Wellness Clinic, July 13 & 18

Clinic will be held on July 13, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. and on July 18 from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. at RST DPP office in Rosebud on Soldier Creek Road. Appointments will be scheduled but walk-ins are always welcome.

Antelope community powwow sees good crowd

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ANTELOPE - The 42th annual Antelope Community powwow was undeterred by the threatening thunder storms that rolled through the area on Friday night, July 7 and got off to a good start according to schedule. There was no dance contest, however, dancers were paid day money and were able to participate in a number of specials. Grace Menard sponsored a men's traditional 'winner take all' contest in memory of her father, Bill Menard, and a women's traditional special in memory of her mother, Ruby Menard.

A total of 41 tiny tots and 20 older dancers had registered as of Saturday evening and a hand drum contest sponsored by Glenn Yellow Eagle and family was to be held, while a potato dance, and a switch dance was also on the agenda. By Sunday evening, the numbers of total dancers was around 70.

The storm left a good sprinkling of moisture which settled the dust around the Rosebud. The royalty during the powwow included, Miss SGU, Michael Garneaux, the new Ms. Antelope, Chelsea Larvie, Little Miss Antelope, Asia Black Bull, Judy Shields Him, Ms. Ring Thunder and Lynssey New Holy, Ms. Oglala Nation. The Wild Horse Butte color guard from Martin posted the colors on Saturday evening.

The powwow featured a nice variety of events for the community to enjoy including, a Saturday morning road walk and road run, mud volleyball, a three-on-three basketball tournament on the outside court at Antelope, and concert on Saturday evening featuring dee jay Kevin McGowan of White River. The sound system was set up in front of the Antelope community center and a youth dance was scheduled from 8 p.m. to midnight.

A parade was held on Saturday morning and the entrants included the Boys and Girls Club, the Fire Hall, the Rosebud Ambulance, Miss Teen Rodeo, the Kiyukanpi kids, and Zintkala. The first place winner was the Boys and Girls Club, Zintkala was second and the Kiyukanpi kids were third.

Despite the daytime heat which reached into the mid 90's the Saturday afternoon powwow session went on as scheduled. Brian and Barb Herman who live on the Ring Thunder road served the community a traditional Lakota meal, while the family of Dr. Rev. Marrles Moore of the White Eagle Christian Academy provided the supper meal.

The Saturday evening grand entry saw a good crowd well over a hundred people and a smaller number of dancers. Marty Makes Room was the Emcee, while SGU Lakota Studies instructor, Francis Cutt, gave the invocation in Lakota. There were several drums registered including, Buffalo Soldier from Lower Brule, Eagle Creek, Kiyukanpi, Eagle Voice, Leca Wakan, Charging Horse, Manderson, and Mato Gleska from Corn Creek.

The lead singers from each drum group were summoned to the middle and were asked to sing several "wategli" or "victory songs" for the crowd. Makes Room noted that it was vitally important for the younger singers to work to learn and retain such songs as they give great honor to those who have served in the military.

Sage Fast Dog won the 'winnertake all' men's traditional, while Tyler Makes Room won the women's.

Those Antelope community members on the powwow committee included Lisa Beauvais, Dixie Larvie, Coni Beardt and Berdine Yellow Eagle. Grace Menard served as the arena director and Marty Makes Room was the 'eyapaha'. Stanley LaPointe served as security and LaMona Whiting and MaKayla Hesse served as the youth committee.

A timeline of events in the U.S. government's case against John Graham

- 1973: Anna Mae Pictou Aquash of Nova Scotia takes part in the American Indian Movement's occupation of Wounded Knee.

- 1976: Her body is found near Wanblee, on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. A second autopsy concludes that she was killed by a gunshot wound to the head.

- 2003: A federal grand jury indicts Graham and Arlo Looking Cloud of first-degree murder committed in the perpetration of a kidnapping. Graham is arrested in Vancouver, British Columbia, and Looking Cloud, a native of Pine Ridge, is arrested in Denver. Looking Cloud returns to South Dakota. Graham fights extradition.

- 2004: Looking Cloud is convicted and sentenced to life in prison. Witnesses at the trial testify that Graham shot Aquash. Her body is exhumed from an Oglala, grave and reburied in Nova Scotia.

- 2005: A Canadian judge rules that Graham should be extradited.

- 2006: The Canadian minister of justice affirms that decision. Graham remains under house arrest in Vancouver.

Rulings go against Graham accused in Aquash killing

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - A Canadian man has lost two rulings in his attempt to avoid extradition to the United States to stand trial for the 1975 slaying of fellow American Indian Movement member Anna Mae Pictou Aquash.

Her family sees the most recent decision, from the Canadian minister of justice, as a positive step for them, but not a final judgment because John Graham will appeal.

Still, one of Aquash's two daughters, Denise Maloney Pictou of Halifax, Nova Scotia, said it made her more confident that the family someday will find closure.

"It's not a closed case, but that was the decision we were waiting for," Pictou said in a telephone interview. "You can't rush the justice system."

Graham, a native of the Yukon, has been free on bail in Vancouver, British Columbia, under house arrest.

In March 2005, a judge ordered him committed for extradition. Last month, Canadian Minister of Justice Vic Toews affirmed that decision.

After both rulings, Graham was allowed free on bail, with several conditions.

If Graham's request for judicial review, or appeal, is accepted, the British Columbia Court of Appeal would consider the rulings from the judge and the minister of justice. If Graham loses there, the only other option is the Canadian Supreme Court, said Christian Girouard, spokesman for the Canadian Department of Justice in Ottawa.

Graham's lawyer, Terry La Liberte of Vancouver, said the case is not over.

La Liberte said besides Graham's appeal, there are unrelated cases pending before the Canadian Supreme Court concerning extradition rules. Those decisions could offer Graham some rights that he does not currently have, such as the chance to cross-examine witnesses, he said.

"It would be a whole new ball game," La Liberte said.

Aquash's death came amid clashes in the mid-1970s between federal agents and AIM. Aquash was among the AIM members who occupied Wounded Knee for 71 days in 1973.

U.S. prosecutors have said AIM leaders ordered Aquash's killing because they suspected that she was a government informant. AIM leaders denied the accusation and blamed the government for her death.

Another man, Arlo Looking Cloud, was convicted in 2004 in the slaying. In a videotaped interview, he said he helped drive Aquash from Denver to Rapid City and eventually to the Badlands. Looking Cloud and others have said that's where Graham shot her.

Graham has acknowledged that he was with Aquash before she was killed but has denied having anything to do with the murder. He has said he is the victim of a witch hunt.

Pictou said closure for the family won't come until everyone involved with her mother's murder comes to justice

"It's not a matter of the jail time or revenge. It's a matter of taking responsibility for their actions," she said.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have been reading your columns now for some time and I enjoy the advice you give to others. You seem like a person who cares a lot about what others think and feel. Well, I have a couple of questions, of my own, for you. I am pregnant with my third child and I really, really want another girl so that I can dress her up like I did my other daughter.

I am feeling so much like I am going to have another boy, though, because of the fact that I am getting so sick. You see with my daughter I didn't get sick and with my son I did, but with this pregnancy the sickness is so much worse than the last two.

A few family members and friends say that I am going to have twins because it's so bad and because I am starting to show already (I never show this early), but my ultrasound showed only on baby.

My questions to you are do you see me with only one baby or with twins and am I going to get my girl or is my body right and is it a boy?

Thank you for your time and may God bless you.

Wants a girl

Dear Wants a Girl:

Your body is right - another boy is on his way from the Great Beyond. This is a very special child who has many gifts.

He comes back to your family again - I see him as one of your grandfathers, so look for the little wise one and welcome him with an open heart. Another girl is not out of the question, perhaps about two years from now so save those clothes!

Try drinking sweet grass tea once a day. Pray over it for the Spirit of Wellness.

Just boil about two inches of the braid and drink it. It will settle down your tummy and help your and your baby's body as well as spirits. Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I recently discovered my boyfriend likes to get on the internet and make contact with women. He writes intimate words to them. He said it is not bad and that he is not serious about it and he can let it go anytime but he hasn't.

He told me he does it just for fun. I don't want to be a part of it anymore and I want to move away from it.

I just want to understand why he does that, what makes him want to do email to women and make contact with them on dating services.

What makes him want to revive old friendships through email?

Confused

Dear Confused:

Brother! It is not okay and it is not all right. It is a form of betrayal. It is purely physical - for physical excitement without obligation or commitment.

Men and women that are out of balance utilize the internet to create a form of imagery that has an unhealthy energy regarding self-image, attraction and personal power.

It is a form of mental pornography and it can be a symptom of profound intimacy issues.

It is a symptom of a society that does not understand the depth of true intimacy and has forgotten the sacredness of the Creator involved in a sexual relationship between lovers.

Let him know that it is not right, and quite honestly I advise you to pull the equality card by asking him how he would like it if you did that.

Communication on the internet is not a safety net - it is the first step before meeting in person.

Sexual fantasies are part of the mind working in most healthy men and women but should never involve another real person. They should be silent and internal, never externalized because they bring an imbalance in what is real: love and along with that, the respect for the one you love.

Dear Anna,

I am 12 years old and I am in love with my first cousin. I know it is wrong and I haven't tried to kiss her or anything but I want to. Is there anyway that we can be together?

We are together every day and I want to someday marry her.

Can I be with her?

Wants to hold her hand

Dear Wants to hold her hand:

No. You cannot love her in that way, not in the man-woman way. You can love her in your heart as your sister and as your friend. You are going through a rough hormonal time.

Testosterone is racing through your body and so it excites your mind. I know you think about girls about every sixty seconds or so and I know it is driving you nuts.

Your cousin loves you like her brother but she is very strong and will not let you touch her in anyway that is not good. Please keep your love and your hands and your mouth to yourself and don't approach her and make your family worry that you cannot be trusted.

It is hard to understand but it is considered sick behavior to want a woman that is in your immediate family circle. It is against the Lakota ways, the European ways, the Red Road ways and the Christian ways.

When school starts you will find another girl to like. She will like you back so wait until then and survive this crush without embarrassing yourself and making your cousin think that she hates you. Good Luck!

Dear Readers,

Sundance season is here. A time of sacred circle connection to the Creator. Pray for each other and for your spiritual leaders who are tested everyday.

Blessings to you, I honor your way and your hearts. I honor your strength and your endurance. You are an amazing people and your spirit and bravery is impressive.

I love you all. I will join your prayers for wicozani for the People .

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests maybe subject to publication.

PINE RIDGE - On Monday, July 17 at 1 p.m. the Oglala Sioux tribal court and chief judge, Lisa Adams granted a temporary restraining order against the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council keeping them from denying Cecelia Fire Thunder the right to exercise her rights as President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe pending a hearing and Fire Thunder shall be restored to her position as president pending a hearing set for July 28 at 1 p.m.

Later on in the same afternoon, Adams vacated the temporary restraining order and reinstatement of Fire Thunder pending the hearing set for July 28 in response to a request made by tribal attorney, George Patton, on behalf of several members of the tribal council.

They cited the failure of the tribal court to provide proper notice to all parties involved before action taken or injunctive relief granted and the fact that the tribal council officials were acting in their official capacity.

Fire Thunder was suspended by the tribal council on May 30 and impeached by the tribal council by a vote of 9-4 on June 29. Will Peters,

Judge freezes line office closings

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - U.S. District Court chief judge, Karen Schreier, granted a preliminary injunction halting the planned restructuring of the BIA's Office of Indian Education as requested by several Great Plains tribes and tribal grant schools on July 14. The preliminary injunction effectively halts the closing of any reservation-based education line offices in the Dakotas, currently located in Mission, Eagle Butte, Lower Brule, and Pine Ridge and in Ft. Yates and Belcourt in North Dakota.

The 28 page order provides a timeline of the restructuring as envisioned by its primary architect, Ed Parisian, then-acting director of OIEP. The plaintiff tribes named in the court document include, the Yankton Sioux Tribe, Flandreau Sioux Tribe, Oglala Sioux Tribe, Cheyenne

Deb Bordeaux and Harold Frazier

River Sioux Tribe, Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, Lower Brule Sioux Tribe and the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa. The tribal grant schools include, Marty Indian School, Loneman School, Porcupine School, and the Wounded Knee School District.

Attorney Charles Abourezk is the lead attorney for the tribal schools and tribes, along with Rebecca Kidder for Cheyenne River, Julian Brown for Lower Brule, Rolly Samp for the Flandreau Santee, Steve Emery for Standing Rock and Bernice Delorme for Turtle Mountain.

Parisian, who testified he has been considering the reorganization of the education line officers since 2003, said that the changes were necessary in order to accommodate the demands of the No Child Left Behind act of 2001.

Parisian noted that only 7 of the 23 tribal schools in South Dakota and North Dakota are making adequate yearly progress.

He also contended that the current structure of OIEP does not allow adequate administrative oversight of the line offices.

In his plan, he proposed reducing the number of line offices from 22 to 9 and this would allow a deputy director to spend more time with line officers and thus, improve services to schools with the greatest need. Later in 2004, the number of line officers was increased to 19 as a result of consultation with tribes.

Abourezk said, ""I asked Mr. Parisian whether he had any sci-

Canyon fire causes partial evacuation of Valentine

Dry conditions cause several fires in Pine Ridge area

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

VALENTINE, Neb./PINE RIDGE - With the fire danger in the extreme category northern Cherry County in Nebraska and the Pine Ridge area have been hard hit by fires that have proven costly. A fire at Porcupine apparently burned approximately 340 acres, while a fire in Valentine, Neb. required some 400 fire fighters to contain it.

On Monday, two separate human caused fires were extinguished along the road close to the Prairie Winds casino area, while the fire in Porcupine required the services of a single engine air tanker, the BIA fire department, Kyle, Batesland, Martin, and the Green Valley volunteer fire departments to fighting it.

On Tuesday, a fire in Interior destroyed the Badlands National Historical warehouse and the Native American Outlet. The damage to the warehouse was estimated at $300,000 while the nearby post office and grocery store were spared. Fire crews from Kadoka and Wall volunteer fire departments assisted with the fire fighting.

On Sunday, a fire that started at approximately 4:30 p.m. on the northeast edge of Valentine was serious enough that many homes were entific research, studies, or data that showed the restructuring would help schools meet adequate yearly progress or improve literacy, and he testified he did not."

Important to the planned restructuring was the need for the government to engage the tribes in "meaningful consultation." Judge Schreier wrote, "There is evidence in the record that indicates that plaintiffs were unable meaningfully comment on the potential impact of the proposed restructuring on the tribes and the tribal schools because the BIA did not inform the schools that the money for the restructuring would come from the Indian School Equalization Program (ISEP) funds and the Early Childhood Development funds."

Abourezk said, "The 8th Circuit Court earlier ruled that in order for there to be meaningful consultation, the government has to be honest and disclose everything to the tribes." In 2005, OIEP told those at a tribal consultation that $5 million would be requested from Congress, however, months later OIEP submitted a request to reprogram $1.5 million from ISEP funds. Schreier wrote, "That is not the meaningful consultation required by BIA policy.

The defendants requested that the plaintiffs post a bond of $200,000 which would cover the cost if one of the parties were found to have been wrongly enjoined. Schrier reduced the bond to $1,000.

Abourezk said he was pleased with the testimony of CRST tribal chairman, Harold Frazier and Loneman School's Deb Bordeaux at the hearing, as it put a human face on a rather complex case.

Finally, he said that the decision was "a big step forward in the case. We have to prove a likelihood of success on the merits of the case. We are now going to move ahead with the discovery process and then to trial."

Fires across the region

under evacuation orders north of 5th street. The canyons in and around the City Park area were burning late Sunday night, while at least two assisted living centers had also been evacuated.

The fire had burned up to the edge of 8th and 9th streets and a foundation was still smoldering the next morning, while several houses had burn marks surrounding their yards. There was also a propane tank that had burned grass marks scorched onto the tank. Early estimates revealed that 12-18 homes had been burned, including a funeral home. The Red Cross and the Nebraska Emergency Management Agency were in the area to assess the damage and financial cost to property.

By Monday morning, the number of fire departments on scene had increased to 31. The Valentine Fire Hall served as the parking lot for most of the fire trucks. There was also a Nebraska State Patrol command van stationed in the parking lot. No cause for the fire had been announced, and there were no reports of serious injury or fatalities, however, four fire fighters sustained minor injuries.

Three firefighting air planes had been ordered to assist in putting out the fire, while FEMA was also responding to the emergency. There was even a State Emergency Response Team trailer positioned across from the Valentine High School. The intensely dry weather conditions combined with the record setting heat in the sand hills made the circumstances for firefighters even more challenging.

On Monday morning, Nebraska State Troopers were posted to block off a couple of roads leading into the city park area and the fish hatchery area, which is known as the government canyons area. As "hot spots" continued to flare up throughout the morning, a couple of helicopters were seen over head dropping water out of big orange buckets.

Arlene Close, Postmistress at the Valentine Post Office said she worked until around 10:00 p.m. Sunday night to assess where mail delivery would be affected. She said the northern part of the city was glowing brightly in the night sky and there were some 400 firefighters engaged in the battle. On Monday morning, many fire trucks periodically stopped at the Shell Truck Stop to refill their fire trucks with gas. The cost of gas for the fire trucks will likely be figured into the total cost of the disaster.

Newscasters on KVSH AM were asking people to stay out of the way of the firefighters, while providing periodic updates on the fire. With the temperature in the mid 80's it was 20 degrees cooler than the day before and the humidity was also lower. Wind gusts in the teens helped to clear out some of the smoke by mid-morning, which was irritating, especially to those with upper respiratory issues. Periodic updates were issued by the Valentine Fire Hall and people were asked to donate sandwiches, Tylenol and eye drops for the firefighters.

A news conference was held by Governor Dave Heineman at the Valentine Public Library where he and the deputy director of the NEMA pledged their support. Heineman said,"I'm here to pledge all we can.., We want to continue to monitor the situation. We declared a disaster declaration in June." He continued, "Thanks to the people from South Dakota. There were slurry planes from Denver. They made a difference. The fire reminded me of a tornado and how some homes were destroyed and some were saved. It could have been worse."

Valentine is located down U.S. highway 83, some nine miles from the South Dakota border. Fire departments from Mission, White River, Winner, St. Francis, Rosebud, and Martin responded to the call and provided mutual aid. Some from far away as Sioux Falls responded, as well as many from Nebraska. The Rosebud Fire Department also sent two wild land fire crews to assist. Many Rosebud Sioux reservation residents travel to Valentine on a daily basis to conduct their business and to shop.

New casino grand opening planned
Brown Eyes under fire for no license

PINE RIDGE - "We would love to see the casino open as early as Labor Day," said Walt Big Crow, council representative from Wakpamni District, "We have set Nov. 15 as the latest possible date but we have also encouraged Peska Construction to hire more workers to speed up the construction process."

On July 10 the OST Gaming Commission voted to again to require OST casino construction project manager, Lenart Brown Eyes to have a gaming license to continue to work in his current project manager position. The following day, Daniel Hudspeth, commissioner from Oglala/Whiteclay district escorted Brown Eyes off the construction site.

A legal view was requested from the tribal attorney, George Patton, and he stated that Brown Eyes did not need a license. The gaming commission stands firm in their decision that Brown Eyes needs to apply for a gaming license to continue in his important position as project manager.

council representative from Pine Ridge Village, led the way for the council citing abortion as the issue and rationale for the impeachment, that the council had never authorized any political activity on the tribal presidents part to promote an abortion clinic on Pine Ridge reservation and that the activity embarrassed the OST and all of its members.

Fire Thunder in court briefs on Monday and in a press conference held in Rapid City on Tuesday stated the issue of her impeachment is a question of procedures and following the rules.

She stated that the complaint was not filed in a legal manner with the OST secretary before it was brought to the floor of the council, that she was not given the complaint with all documents until the day of the hearing, that an impeachment requires two thirds vote of the entire council, 12 votes not nine.

She also said that the two council members who filed the complaint should not be involved in the deliberations or be allowed to vote and that council representative Tom Poor Bear's vote should have been counted.

Following the original order of the court on Monday, Fire Thunder returned to her office at the Red Cloud building and shook Alex White Plume's hand after handing him a copy of the judge's reinstatement order.

White Plume moved from his vice president's position to the presidency after the impeachment of Fire Thunder. Fire Thunder did not hear of the judge's decision to vacate the order until after she left the tribal offices for the day.

"We will honor the chief judge's decision and prepare for the full hearing on the issues set for July 28" said Fire Thunder, "I want to emphasize that our complaints filed with the court are based on procedure not followed not on my interest in a wellness clinic for women - the council needs to follow the ordinances and fulfill their oath of office, that is what we are standing on - that does not mean that I am going to stop speaking up for the rights of women; women of all color need to have control over their bodies especially in instances of rape and incest, we are talking about basic rights here."

Fire Thunder stated that there is so much to do and so much left undone. We were in the middle of dealing with negotiating all of the disallowed costs from the Indian Health Service, BIA and BOR as well as renegotiating a new gaming compact with the state and finishing up the new casino, she added.

"It is time for all of us to move on," said Peters during his press conference in Rapid City on Tuesday at the offices of the Sacred Circle, "The council has made a decision and we need to move ahead, not look back or continue to debate issues that we have already made a decision on."

Black selected as new chief of police, John Mousseau as the alternate

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Thursday, the Oglala Sioux tribal council filled the chief of police vacancy with the OST Department of Public Safety by selecting Darla Black, a veteran of 16 years in law enforcement. A motion by Lyle Jack, council representative from Pine Ridge Village, to approve the selection of Darla Black who won the runoff by a vote of 8-5 over John Mousseau and to make Mousseau the alternate and to appoint Mousseau as the temporary chief of police to give Black time to deal with her background investigation, passed 9-4.

Following the removal of Ron Duke as chief of police of the tribe's Department of Public Safety by the tribal council in May, the position was advertised and 12 individuals applied. In addition to Black and Mousseau, those applying included James Twiss, acting chief, Pat Mills, Milton Bianis, Stan Star Comes Out, Grace Her Many Horses, Joe Cross, Lloyd Wilcox, Eugenio White Hawk, Daryl Mesteth and Terrance Roy.

After careful review, the Human Resource office of public safety recommended to the council that they interview Star Comes Out, Mills, Twiss, Bianis and Her Many Horses. Human Resources advised that Mousseau, Cross, White Hawk, Mesteth and Wilcox did not have enough years of service to qualify for the chief's position and Black and Roy had failed the background investigation.

The judiciary committee recommended interviewing nine of the candidates but the council voted 8-3 with one not voting to interview all 12 applicants. Ten of the applicants were interviewed with Bianis and Roy not showing.

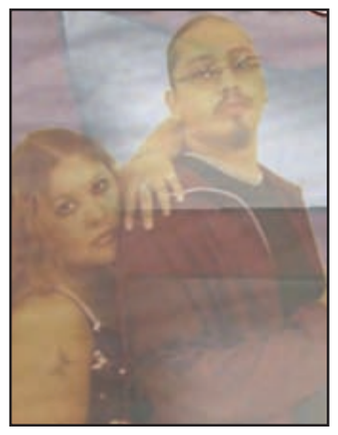
Each council member was given two ballots in the first vote and the council would take the top four in the next go-around. Her Many Horses had six, Mills five, Mousseau four and Black and Twiss tied for fourth with three each. After the council decided to take all five into the next round, Black received four, Mousseau three and Twiss, Mills and Her Many Horses each tallied two. In the final vote, Black received eight and Mousseau five.

After completing the BIA certified police academy at Oglala Lakota College in the early 1980's, Black went to work as a patrol officer in Wounded Knee District in 1984 and over the years she has worked as a sergeant, a lieutenant, an internal affairs investigator and an internal affairs supervisor and as acting executive director.

"When I looked at the job, I knew I could do it, that I had the experience and training to prepare me for a job like this," said Black, "I am looking forward to the position and working to improve the service to the Oglala Lakota people in the coming years and to working hard on improving the budget so that we are able to hire additional officers."

Currently, John Mousseau is the acting chief of police. Black has a court hearing coming up that should clear up any problems with her background investigation.

Native Era is enjoying some recent success, Hip Hop, R& B group records



By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Billy Janis and Hope Brings Plenty of "Native Era" both Oglala Sioux, have persevered since the summer of 2002 to create a sound that some have described as hip hop, R&B, Christian Rap or even contemporary. The young couple is alcohol and drug free and got their start using a tape recorder, microphone, and speakers at a foster parent's home.

Janis said that they do their own public relations, management and setup for their performances. They have also traveled as far away as Ossenbach, West Germany. They played at the America West arena in Phoenix, AZ as well as in Colorado and many locations in South Dakota. In fact, Native Era has participated in 400 events according to Janis.

We show people that there is a way to succeed. We want to be good out there. We also represent all indigenous people of the world" said Janis. Music is apparently a way of life for Native Era as it represents an income that supports them as an independent group. They have a desire to produce other groups as well.

On July 7, the group collaborated with recording artist Bizzy Bone of Bone Thugs-n-Harmony in Columbus, Ohio. The song was entitled, "Defeat Them" and is a song about succeeding, overcoming negative obstacles and hardships.

Billy Janis and Hope Brings Plenty of "Native Era"

Janis said indigenous people sometimes live in poverty and the song was intended to assist people to "believe to achieve."

Janis feels that most Native artist are not being heard and his work is intended to bring such music and artist into the mainstream. He said, "Many young people are inspired by certain artists.

On July 15, Native Era collaborated on a song via the internet with Thin C, a member of the Mo Thugs family, according to Janis. The song was called "Within Me" and it was about the Lord God and creator.

Finally, Native Era has been invited to Seattle, WA on July 29 to perform at the Summer Jam 2006 presented by McDonalds and KUBE FM 93. Ludacris, T.I., Ray Jay, E-40 and Bow Wow. KUBE FM will interview Native Era afterward.

Our Views

Take precaution in hot weather

We're fully immersed in the heat and humidity of the hottest of the summer months, and all around us there are reminders that we need to enjoy ourselves and at the same time, take the necessary precautions to protect ourselves.

The simplest way to protect ourselves, as most of us know, is to drink plenty of water and to stay in the shade.

Or, better yet, it would be advantageous to stay indoors by a fan or with the cooler going.

It seems like the older we get or if we are afflicted with home health issues, it is even more critical that we take care to keep cool.

As we get older our bodies simply cannot take the stress of being overheated, much less being dehydrated.

The children and animals also need to be protected as they can also easily overheat in the intense heat, especially if they happen to be left in an automobile. That is a definite 'no-no' and simply takes common sense to realize that that should never happen.

Ever so, often we see Lakota people hitchhiking during the heat of the day, and they also have a responsibility to be careful and to anticipate what their needs are.

During celebrations, sun dances, and other social gatherings there is a need to share water, information and even such things as sun blocker and mosquito repellant so that all are protected on many fronts.

Lakota people on the northern plains have always adapted to extreme environments and rarely do you ever hear of someone dying from exposure to the elements. That is the good news. Even in the dead of winter, rural and isolated folks seem to understand that Mother Nature can be 'wokokpeke' if you do not respect her power and majesty.

The media and other outlets are joining the effort to inform people that certain precautions have to be taken during the intense heat.

Everything from food safety, to avoiding the outdoors when it is lightening, to protecting oneself from the west Nile virus are all public health issues that we need to inform ourselves and our tiospaye.

Most of the precautions and warnings are simple to understand, but it takes repeated and constant reminders to all who enjoy the outdoors during the summer months.

Our sacred children, the elders, sun dancers, joggers, walkers, and powwow contestants all need to heed the warning to stay hydrated, cool and most of all stay informed as to the current climate conditions all around.

Take precaution when attending sun dance and when deciding to hanbleceya.

Remember there is always a risk during extreme hot weather and mosquitoe bites.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Providing your child with a belief system is one of the greatest gifts you can give them

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Some time ago, we built a sweat behind our house in our house. At first, it was a little difficult for me to take the responsibility of doing so but in my heart I knew it was right. I needed it and my family needed it and the women society I belong to needed it.

We live on the outskirts of Martin and to go to a good sweat we usually have to travel to Wanblee or to Allen. So it was inviting to think that we could have one near and not have to travel those miles before and after a sweat.

The original intent was to acquire land nearby from the tribe, just an itty bitty sum of maybe four acres, so we could build an inipi for women to use. Some of the women in our women's society work in the healing field with healing families and in recovery, so this would be something that would be a positive influence on their work. It wasn't as easy as we thought, we ran into road blocks so that is when I decided to take that responsibility.

On the reservation, there are tona sweat lodges around.

You can find them at the sun dances and the homes of spiritual leaders and at family homes.

We live in Lacreek District and as it is, we don't get a lot of services that other districts do because of our location, so there are times we have to travel to other districts to participate in a wacipi or other cultural events. We are a border town community.

So in doing so, we knew would have a great responsibility, not only to our community in doing it in the spiritual right sense but in taking care of it.

Not in getting the material for it but in keeping it in a sacred manner. In finding and taking care of the rocks to finding wood to watching out for it and keeping the fire in a safe manner.

We live in Bennett County so we have to be respectable to the law here with open fires. So when we do a sweat, we have to notify the police department to let them that we will be having an open fire lest someone sees it and calls the fire department and causes unnecessary action.

It's a simple sweat but a great healing place for cleansing and healing and prayer. We are just glad we have it, maybe someday we will be able to have a privacy fence to shield it from the public and have lots of rocks and wood.

The point of this article is that the inipi is a spiritual connection for cleansing and we did it because it was needed

Several years ago, I worked at Little Wound School and was part of a parenting program designed to help parents become better parents.

The school developed it because they needed help from the parents to help students become better academic learners. The way I seen it, it was frenzy as schools tried to find methods to improve their adequate yearly progress as mandated by the No Child Left Behind through Congress. And helping parents enhance their parenting skills was one of those methods.

And in order for parents to help their children, they needed help with their parenting skills, especially in raising children in communities that are more violence prone.

It took some researching and designing to try to come up with a parenting curriculum that would fit the families we serviced.

As facilitators of the curriculum, we noticed that in working with parents to understand that it is important to a strong family structure to plan activities in the areas of physical, emotional, mental and spiritual.

Those four behavioral aspects are important to living healthier lives and important to teach our children how to develop these in their lives. In working with the young parents in these activities we soon noticed that a great sense of spirituality was lacking in the family structure of those young families.

Not only the sense of a spiritual connection to the Creator but lacking in the sense of more Christian activities for those who beliefs were along those lines.

From the discussions we had during the sessions, families weren't doing enough with their children to teach them to have a spiritual connection with whatever family beliefs or religious beliefs they had. And without that connection, there is a consequence. And for our youth, lack of identity can be a consequence.

So in knowing that, that is what prompted me to take that responsibility of providing a place for spiritual connection, whether it be for my own family or for those that need a place for purification and prayer closer to home.

Providing your child with a belief system in a higher power than themselves is one of the greatest gifts you can give them. That is what will give them the strength they need to have success in their life and to find the happiness they need.

Another side of Beau Merrival

Dear Editor:

Sharing tears with a mother, Darla Merrival, about her son was a 'been there-done that' experience for me. Beau Merrival faces many years in prison and Ms. Merrival wanted people to see a side of him other than that of the demon portrayed by the mainstream media.

When we arrived at the Merrival residence she was greeted by four United States Marshals and a Rapid City police officer.

They were there to search for a nephew. I accompanied them on the search and they made comments that I found quite disturbing. This was the fifth search of her home during this process.

Each time the police have made comments that are totally out of line. At one point officers commented that a "Welfare mom, could not afford to live like that." She receives no welfare.

The media and police have actually tried to pull Ms. Merrival into this as well. She was charged with receiving stolen property with the media reporting that hundreds of dollars worth of stolen property were found in her home following a search.

In truth the police took only three baseball bats and it appears that the charges will be dismissed against her because there is no evidence that the bats were stolen.

She has been portrayed as being the ring leader in a major theft ring involving her son and other young men.

But Ms. Merrival wanted to talk about her son who sits in jail charged with a house burglary, three counts of armed robbery, grand theft, nine counts of vehicular burglary and passing a counterfeit bill. Instead of the demon he has been portrayed, he is a very special young man who "kept me good."

She recalled when he entered a high school rodeo and got a bull that he was not sure he could ride. His grandmother offered him $100 to ride the bull, but he turned to his mother and said, "If you stop smoking, I will ride that bull." He did ride the bull and on the way home they threw her cigarettes out of the car.

Merrival has attempted suicide while in jail and has been placed on Zoloft as a result. The prosecutor in this case left a message with his attorney, Bruce Ellison, following the suicide attempt, saying that she wanted to discuss his client's behavior with him. Now, the prosecutor is a truly caring person who just happens to have prosecuted an innocent man in Meade County.

Merrival did not graduate from Central this year as he was arrested on these charges prior to graduation. He wants to graduate to please his grandmother who has stood by him. His grandparents, Joe Merrival and Gertie Traversie have been totally supportive of him during this trying time. Joe Merrival owns a Buffalo ranch known as the Kissing Buffalo Ranch. If bond is set he will mortgage his buffalo ranch to pay the bond.

His ninth grade English Teacher, and a vocal supporter of Merrival said that he had not done well in her English class, however "His appearance, and behavior were exemplary."

His mother actually said that he had failed 9th grade English. He now says he will graduate from Central even if he is thirty years old, because his grandmother wants him to do that.

Ms. Merrival thinks her son needs to be evaluated. She stated that he had not been any trouble until he started drinking the summer of 2005. He doesn't seem to be able to control his drinking. She is concerned that he may have a brain chemical imbalance, such as bipolar disorder.

She obtained a Title XIX card for him but was told by Ellison, that the jail said it cannot be used because he is incarcerated.

He is covered by the Indian Health Service, but the jail refuses to use that source.

Until these charges Beau had little trouble. She credits the labeling by the Central liaison officer as a main influence in his troubles. He was labeled as being a gang banger and charged with simple assault by the officer and the Rapid City Police Department. He refused to plead guilty to a reduced charge of Disorderly Conduct and the charges ending up being dismissed. This liaison officer has disliked him since that time.

After he started drinking and partying last summer she was truly concerned about him. Last December he was with a group of kids who robbed a home on the West Side. He admitted his role in that and refused to name others involved.

He bonded out of jail on the house burglary charge.

Then later he was accused of stealing lap tops from Central High School. It appears that those laptops may not have been missing at all. His car was searched and officers found nothing. The officers at the search scene and was told to have him arrested for violation of his bond.

He has been in jail since that time without any bond having been set. At a hearing last Monday, Ellison sought more information on that charge.

He worked at TGI Fridays. Two females and he were caught with counterfeit bills, apparently coming from tips from a customer in the restaurant. He, alone was charged. It appears police believe that Merrival was the counterfeiter.

His uncle is a teacher in Pine

How can we expect young people to learn conflict resolution?

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The conflict in the area known as the Middle East focuses attention on the difficulty of living together on Mother Earth. As it continues to occupy the center stage of world events, the conflict is simply too far removed from us and too complex to understand.

Lakota people from way back, many years must have also shook their head and wondered about the dynamics of interacting with and dealing with different tribes and people who were moving into a land that was already occupied by our ancestors.

We surely understood in later years, the notion of 'ethnic cleansing' when the federal government sought to 'kill the Indian' in any manner possible. It is interesting that individual soldiers who annihilated women and children didn't step forward and become conscientious objectors and simply say, "I can't do this. I can't kill women and children."

As human kind, we all agree that human life is sacred, particularly that of a precious child. Yet, we see today, women and children being, inadvertently or otherwise, targeted for destruction by invading armies. It is even more ironic when you read about early cavalry soldiers who were awarded a Medal of Honor for killing old men, women and children. As a warrior, I would say that is shameful.

This state sponsored killing is just too much for me to listen to. Thank God we do not have cable television so that we can see the minute by minute changes in the conflicts around the world. As an adult, it is troubling to me to hear about the escalating conflict and I can imagine that it is something that is equally as troubling for our young also. I have not asked my son what he thinks of the increasing tensions, but then I don't want to influence him with my views. He will have to take a look back at what history did to Lakota people and make up his own mind.

How can we expect conflict resolution sessions for young people to succeed, when many countries have shown that it is better to hit back? An eye for an eye, as the old adage says. If I weren't an optimist, I guess I would say that society is spinning out of control and it is going to be interesting to see what it all looks like in fifty years or more. I thank tunkasila that I won't be here, or either that, I will be a centagenarian and that can't be much fun either.

Lakota people have a certain enduring solidarity as a people even today and we thank tunkasila that we still have our sun dance, our language and our culture that makes us unique from all other people of the world. We understand geopolitical and armed conflict all too well, as we survived many attempts at ethnic cleansing on the northern plains. I went to the sun dance this morning and prayed that other ethnic minorities around the world would be protected by tunkasila as well.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Notes From Indian Country

Traveling the road to 'cultural suicide'

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

To govern is to exercise authority, control, influence and objectivity. One of the most important elements of governance should be restraint. Too many tribal governments do all of the above, with the exception of restraint and objectivity, excessively.

On any given day one has only to go to Indianz.com, probably the best Indian online media source, and read the daily screw ups of tribal leadership and governance.

On any Indian reservation in America, and probably in Canada where they are called reserves, the weeks leading up to an election, finds the Native politicians smiling, shaking hands, waving at prospective voters, and just being gracious and hospitable to all. Several weeks after they are elected their entire demeanor changes, and not for the good I might add.

Let me just say here that I am generalizing because to every rule there is an exception. But since I have been the editor of major Indian newspapers for more than 30 years I believe I have heard it all. Letter after letter from tribal members from as far away as California or as near as Nebraska, had driven home to me the discontent so many Indians have with their elected leadership.

Oh, it is without a doubt, the nature of the beast to have political dissent on most Indian reservations. For every ruling party there is a party of discontent. For nearly every elected tribal leader there is a challenger. But that does not explain the ongoing rumble of anger I have heard across the political spectrum of Indian country.

In the 1970s the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota was torn apart by those opposed to the leadership of Tribal Chairman Dick Wilson. It didn't just end in rhetoric, but instead settled into a near bloody war between the factions. Somewhere in the argument there should have been a middle ground, but in the heat of political dissent and propaganda, none could be found.

After the turmoil and the waning interest by the national media had taken hold, many members of the opposition, the American Indian Movement, left the reservation and went back to wherever it was they came from while those who supported Chairman Wilson remained to clean up the mess. AIM had the ear of the media and the propaganda machine to go with it. Even to this day you will see movies and documentaries that tell only their side of the argument.

For the most part there is no separation of powers on most Indian reservations. I have seen tribal councils have their election board members jailed because they dared to disagree with the dictates of the council.

When an elected tribal council can arbitrarily suspend a sitting president without a hearing, things have gone totally awry. Such was the case of Cecilia Fire Thunder, the first woman, and the duly elected president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. Fire Thunder, who is legally deaf, was in Iowa for treatment of her hearing loss when the tribal council suspended her.

She was effectively denied her equal rights and protections under the Constitution of the United States, but not in the eyes of the tribal council and in their reckoning, not under the auspices of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Constitution.

Fire Thunder was then impeached for "recommending" the construction of a Planned Parenthood Clinic on the reservation in lieu of a law passed by the South Dakota State Legislature that would have banned all abortions in the state not even making an exception for rape and incest. Fire Thunder thought that this was wrong and since she is a former nurse, she immediately considered ways and means to prevent pregnancy, not to end it, and in her mind, a Planned Parenthood Clinic would be the answer.

In other words, she was impeached for her thoughts and not for her actions. This backward tribal council was engulfed in the political propaganda spewed by the rightwing legislators in state government that besmirched the reputation of the employees of Planned Parenthood and shouted religious obscenities in an effort to destroy it. And for the most part, most of the shouting was done by white males, that is until the Indian males and Christian females of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council joined the chorus.

But the tribal council of the Pine Ridge Reservation is not alone in its inadequacies. I have heard from readers in Arizona, Oklahoma, Iowa, California, Montana, North Dakota, Wyoming, New Mexico, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota condemning the actions of tribal councils ruling Indian reservations located in those states.

As long as the people of the Indian nations continue to elect uneducated dummies to serve as their governing bodies there will always be drastic problems in Indian country. As long as those politicians with the largest families of voting age are elected, not because of their qualifications but because of their family support, unqualified leaders will continue to rule.

America became a nation 230 years ago and tribal governments came into vogue 72 years ago. Authority, control and influence appear to be the factors predominant in both cultures. Restraint and objectivity have been pushed to the rear of the bus. As tribal governments move further in the direction of the mainstream, traditional systems of restraint, fair play, cultural separation, and the loss of inherent rights have been shoved aside in the name of so-called progress. And as we move into the age of "casino mentality," the situation will worsen. In the end we will have sold our very souls for money and power.

I am afraid that the Indian Nations are on the road to "cultural suicide."

Ridge. He said that at first students said that it could not have been Beau involved in the armed robberies. Lately, because of the demonization by the media they have been asking, "Who would have thought that Beau would turn out like that?"

Merrival has a room full of trophies and medals from Pine Ridge High School. He seemed to throw himself into his sports. He is also an artist and a poet and his drawings fill a book in his room.

His poetry leaves his mother in tears, especially a poem he wrote after attempting suicide. Moving to Rapid City was probably a mistake.

He is the oldest child and has a 14 year old brother and 17 year old sister. His youngest brother is eight years old.

He particularly misses his youngest brother, who has basically refused to talk to him since he was put in jail. He used to have hot wheels tournaments with Beau, but now will not play with the hot wheels.

Ms. Merrival said repeatedly that her son is not the demon he has been made out to be and that she believes he may be suffering from a brain imbalance that is set off by the alcohol. No evaluation has been done on him.

She knows that her son made some poor choices but believes that alcohol played a major role. She believes that he should not spend a long time in prison and that his talents can be better used if he receives an evaluation and gets treatment.

She ended by saying, "Beau is a good, kind young man, his teachers and his real friends know that. He got involved with the wrong group and with alcohol, and a codefendant is telling police what they want to hear." She told me that she will be praying for my son and of course, I pray for hers.

Education hump day: midway through summer vacation

By Dr. Jim Wilson

It is always astounding when Friday the 13 falls on a Thursday (or any other day but a Friday). As I arose this morning and glanced at the calendar I realized that it is July 14 and Education Hump Day.
We are halfway through the summer school vacation period.

I wanted to quickly pull on my blue coveralls, grab my straw hat and run out into the front yard yelling to my friends that we were starting the downhill stretch before school would again start.

However, my creaky bones reminded me that, like my computer, my mind was doing a 'flash scan' of its hard disk memories checking for bugs and viruses. Because I always connect the second Friday of July with being halfway through the summer I was experiencing my annual education déjà vu.

Getting my coffee (one pack of pink sweetener) and settling into my favorite chair for reading I picked up the daily newspaper, but found no interest in the headlines of fires, floods, droughts, bombings, killings, executions, uncovered plots, accusations and endless Letters to the Editor each claiming the high ground. Dropping the newspaper to the floor, I reached for my Zeroxed copy of the 1950 Oglalan Yearbook. I had lost my original and a few years ago Charles "Spit" Swallow, "Ronie" Fielder and I had borrowed Erna Belle Amiotte's copy to make copies for ourselves.

The graduating class of 1950 had actually made its own Yearbook. We did the layout, page by page. We cut and glued, we typed and fitted the pieces.

We sold enough ads to pay for copying and binding 50 copies. We did it ourselves, the twenty one of us working as a team.

Five of us had started together in Miss Christiana Hudtloff's Primary grade. We progressed through the years with one teacher (mostly dedicated Old Maids) at a time studying what was known as a "core" curriculum in which one teacher taught all subjects.

In High School we had a couple of extra teachers for math, science and vocational areas like Agriculture, wood working, baking and dairying, but even then we moved as a group or small groups.

Our class of 21 included Donald Janis, Erna Belle Amiotte, Evelyn Bad Wound, Ethel Bissonette, Leona Brewer, Benjamin Cottier, Morris Eagle Elk, Jean Harwood, Joe Hawkins, Austin Means, Phyllis Pond, Winona Cottier (Provost), Verna Roan Eagle, Lena Standing Soldier, George Twiss, Doreen Two Bulls, Delores Two Elk, Wilma Whirlwind Horse, Florence Whipple, Delores Wounded Horse and myself. Evelyn Bergen was our Senior Homeroom Teacher.

Through the years many of us crossed paths and kept in touch, but sadly every year there are fewer of us. The one thing we all remember is the unity of our class; we were like a family and Mrs. Bergen was our 'Mother away from home.'

From Hump Day until school started in late August or early September I always eagerly looked forward to seeing my friends at school.

I spent eleven years as a boarder in the dorms and always favored the steam heat, electric lights and indoor plumbing over our family's log house. Moving from the Pine Ridge Boarding School (its common name on the Rez) to the US Navy was an easy.

It was in the Navy that I discovered how good my basic education had been as I attended special schools and advanced in rank to Gunfire Control Petty Officer 2nd Class aboard a Navy Destroyer (USS Chevalier, DDR-805) and stood at the controls of all of its firepower in Wonsan Harbor, North Korea as the July 1953 Armistice was signed. Quite a big deal for an OCHS kid half way around the world from home!

Many of my classmates had similar career progressions and I mention my Navy experience to make a point; there is no limit to what a person can do IF they want to.

The actual information passed to a student in the classrooms is of little value compared to the methods of research, problem solving and coping they can develop.

I am still interested in learning and with my practiced methods can find out for myself almost anything I want to know.

Some of the readers of this paper might recall that I have written in the past about being a Social Scientist with teaching credentials. But, did any of you know that my hobby is the study of streams and rivers?

Streams and rivers were the original highways for people as the world expanded and the various groups flowed outward to create their own economies, cultures, languages and religions.

Did you realize that if you followed Wolf Creek (rising in the Sand Hills south of the Pine Ridge Airport) long enough you'd meet White Clay Creek, White River, the Missouri River, the Mississippi River and then the Gulf of Mexico, which is but a small part of the connected oceans of the world? My point here is that even the smallest stream leads to the oceans of the world!

As we look forward to another school year I hope that all of the new and returning students will realize that they are on a wonderful Journey, and preparation for the trip can be exciting and very enjoyable.

Learning is a lifelong activity and should be seen as preparation for continuing the journey we began the day we were born.

The day you stop learning is the day you will end your journey.

I never want to end my journey and I would not trade my OCS/Boarding School education for anything!

DENVER - From traditional costumes to warm-up suits of all colors, over 7,000 athletes marched onto Invesco Field in Denver, July 2nd to formally signal the opening of the 2006 North American Indigenous Games. The field, usually highlighted by the Denver Broncos football team, saw teams from 23 states and 11 provinces parade onto the field in preparation for competition in 16 different sports at a variety of venues around the Denver Metropolitan area.

Promoted as a celebration of heritage and athleticism, the athletes were led by tribal officials and in some cases traditional headsmen. Ceremonies included a traditional drum group, the Native Hip Hop break dancers, the Red Power Squad from Canada, MC's Drew Lacapa and Wauneek Cornmiller, comedian Don Burnstick and featured past U.S. Senator Ben Night Horse Campbell reading a letter from President George Bush;

Kyla Marshall, Mission, won the first gold medal of the Games with a win in the bantam cross country on Monday in Parker at the Colorado Equestrian Park; Jerad Weston, Oglala, followed it up with a gold in the bantam cross country and the games were on.

Team South Dakota competed in eight of the 16 sports of the 2006 games winning 19 medals in athletics (cross country and track and field), five golds and two silvers in boxing, two golds, a silver and a bronze in wrestling, a gold, silver and a bronze in archery and three team golds in basketball.

Juvenile boys survive tough competition, schedule changes, protest, overtime to win gold

Duran Eastman, Sisseton Wahpeton, hit four straight free throws late in the second half to seal a 72-70 win over Arizona to win the Juvenile Boy's Basketball gold medal on Friday at the Metro State College gym on the Auraria campus in downtown Denver. South Dakota weathered a two hour protest by Team Minnesota and a 64-61 hard fought overtime win against Wisconsin to get into the championship game.

"We had an awful lot of talent, many of the players had been starters on their high school teams or often the leaders and top scorers," said Dave Brushbreaker, head coach, "we sat down and discussed that the main goal was to win the gold medal and that we needed everyone to play hard and contribute what they could whether they were a starter or came in off the bench."

Team South Dakota juvenile boys opened the games with three straight wins in pool play, a 79-66 win over Arizona, an 88-27 win over Nova Scotia and a 62-46 win over British Columbia.

The schedule and bracket changed three times and on Tuesday the team found out at 7:45 a.m. that their 11:45 a.m. game with British Columbia had been moved to 8 a.m. On Wednesday, the team finished their pool play by losing to Minnesota 64-56 and beating Eastern Door 93-53.

With a 4-1 record in pool play, South Dakota moved into the medal round only to have their first round game with Oklahoma held up by a protest initiated by Minnesota because they did not make the medal round.

The organizers added Minnesota and Washington to the medal round, South Dakota promptly knocked off Washington 72-59 while Kansas Middletent hit for 19 points and Duran Eastman chipped in 18 points and five rebounds to lead South Dakota past Oklahoma 64-59.

South Dakota struggled in the semis against Wisconsin, getting 18 points down with 11 minutes to go in the second half. After putting on a full court press, they were still down 11 points with 1:54 to go in the game but went on to take the lead in the last 30 seconds only to have a last second three tie up the game at 56 all at the end of regulation. JJ Arcoren, St. Francis, hit a basket and a free throw in the overtime period, TJ McCauley, Lower Brule, hit three of four from the line and Gunner Krogman, Todd County, hit a a field goal as South Dakota pulled it out 64-61 in overtime. Arcoren finished with a team high 17 points, McCauley added 16, Eastman chipped in 14 and Krogman finished with 10 points.

In the championship game with Arizona, the lead went back and forth the entire game until Eastman hit his four free throws late in the second half. McCauley finished with a game high 22 points, Arcoren helped with 17 and Eastman added 15 or a 72-70 win and the gold medal.

Scott, McGhee lead Midget boys to gold medal in basketball

South Dakota lost their first game in pool play on Monday by four points to Oklahoma but came storming back to win six straight games finishing the championship with a 59-42 win over Oklahoma for the gold medal.

"In that first game with Oklahoma, it showed that we had not played a game yet as a team," said Alfred Leftwich, head coach, "because all of our team members were so spread out it was hard to get a feel of a team until we were in a real game; then it was a building process to see what combination worked the best together and what we needed to improve on for the next game."

Playing at Metro State College on the Auraria campus, South Dakota knocked off Arizona, Colorado and Michigan to go into the medal round on Thursday. Down by 17 points in the second half against Arizona and with the opportunity of moving to the medal round on the line, Christian McGhee and Billy Scott stepped up to lead the team to a comeback 51-49 win. Scott finished with 20 points and 14 rebounds while McGhee added 17 points and six steals. Bryer Iron Cloud hit a late three pointer that gave South Dakota their first lead, grabbed a crucial rebound and hit a late game free throw to seal the win.

McGhee and Scott led the way in the first medal round game at the Regency as SD knocked off Washington 59-47. Scott hit for 21 points and 11 rebounds and McGhee added 21 points. SD got by a tough Idaho team in the semis 67-57 as McGhee hit for 19, Iron Cloud chipped in 18 and Scott added 10 points and seven rebounds.

In the championship game, SD took the lead immediately and built on it throughout the game, winning the gold 59-42 over Oklahoma in a rematch of their first game. Scott tossed in 17 points, McGhee hit for 16 and Jay Pond grabbed eight rebounds. Team South Dakota included RJ Estes, Roman Leftwich,

Brother C.M. Simon S.J.

HOLY ROSARY MISSION - Br. Simon, 69, died suddenly on Friday, July 14, at the Jesuit residence at Angostura.

Brother C.M. Simon, S.J., was born on Nov. 23, 1936, in Spring Valley, MN, one of ten children of Hugh and Ellen Simon. Five years after completing high school, he entered the Society of Jesus as a Jesuit brother, at the age of 22.

In 1964, after some years of spiritual formation and further studies, Br. Simon was assigned to Holy Rosary Mission/Red Cloud Indian School on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota.

He spent the rest of his life at Holy Rosary, working among the Oglala Lakota people he so loved. Until 1982 he worked in the Business Office, but early on became interested in Native American traditional and fine arts and the culture and history of the Lakota people. In 1969 he helped organize the first annual Red Cloud Indian Art Show. He slowly began to build the collection of Native American art objects that eventually became the permanent collection of the Red Cloud Heritage Center.

As the years passed, he learned more and more about beauty seen through Lakota eyes. From 1982 until his death, Br. Simon devoted all his considerable talent and energy to building up both the Heritage Center and the Red Cloud Indian Art show. He stepped down as Director in 2004 but remained very active as Curator of the permanent collection. Over the years, Br. Simon helped any number of young Native American artists gain recognition.

He had a wide circle of friends and colleagues, both among the Lakota people of the Pine Ridge and elsewhere. He was active in a number of professional organizations, including the Native American Art Studies Association, the Northern Plains Indian Art Market, and the South Dakota Arts Council. Historians and art critics frequently consulted him in connection with research on the history of the Lakota people, Catholic missionary activity among the Lakota and contemporary Native American art. He had been a Jesuit brother for 47 years, and had served the Lakota people on the Pine Ridge for 42 years. He is mourned by his Jesuit brothers; his remaining three brothers, Eugene Simon and Jeremiah Simon, both of Spring Valley, MN, and Theodore Simon, Menomonie, WI; two sisters, Helen Eggler, Cameron, WI, and Ann Marie Heppleman, Bellechester, MN; and by the many, many people whose lives he touched in his passionate effort to make known the beauty of the Lakota people as this is reflected in their traditional and fine arts. A wake-visitation begins at 3 p.m. Wednesday, July 19 at the Sacred Heart Catholic Church in Pine Ridge. A Mass of Christian Burial will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Thursday, July 20, at Holy Rosary Catholic Church north of Pine Ridge, with the Jesuit Fathers concelebrating. ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am having a lot of problems and I need your advise. I have four babies and I am single I work at a place that doesn't pay to much and I am making ends meet and my ex is trying to get back with me and I don't know what to do.

I think about it sometimes because when I was with him I didn't have it so hard but I think about how jealous and stuff he is and I have another ex that I sometimes wish that we could make it but I know that there will be alot of outside trouble. I was thinking about going back to school but I think I don't have time to do that.

Do you see anything happen better in my future? Do you see me and my ex getting back together do you know which one I mean?

Dazed and confused

Dear Dazed and Confused:

The struggles you are having will not be resolved by going back to any of your exes. The same reasons that it did not work out then would happen again. I know how hard you have it financially - and how you want to be rescued.

Unfortunately, there is no prince charming that will bail you out. I know you don't think you have time to go to school - but each year you will be getting older, struggling harder without resolution until you get it together and go to school.

When you finally make up your mind to return to school you will see that you can make a good living when you complete a certification program. I see you finally organizing yourself to go into a medical technical program. It looks like it may be an x-ray tech certification program, or possibly a dental tech program (I see x-ray machines). You can go to school part time and still work 75 percent of the time.

There is more help for you economically when you go to school than if you do not go. Please change your financially dismal future by going back to school sooner than I see you going.

The path that I see you on is returning to your ex, going through the same struggles, crying and depression, and unfair stress on your children because of your struggles before you finally understand that the only person responsible enough to take care of you is you - so please don't delay and investigate financial help - a PELL grant and other subsidies and start taking care of your future. Good Luck and blessings to you.

Dear Anna,

I've read about you and the stories you write and heard stories about you. I read them every week, but what I want is to ask you for your help or what you see for me. Anyways I moved around alot (I've been in more that 14 placements) See I'm a foster kid and living with a very nice home but before this home I was in a treatment place for ten months.

I was placed there because my so called aunt didn't want me any more. You see I was with her and her family for almost three years and I became very attached. I really thought that that was my last move and that I would get adopted. I was accused of killing her pet dog and other stuff too, but this is what bothers me the most now, well I don't know if it's true but I was told that she don't want anything to do with me any more.

I still can't get over it. Are pets more important than family is? See I went to treatment and none of it helps because they made me believe that I did it and now people don't believe me anymore. The other thing is my biological mom had ten kids and she was an alcoholic and five or seven got put in foster care. What bothers me the most is that I only know two sisters and one brother. Where are the rest and will I ever see them?

Right now my mom is working on getting me and my older sister back. My other sister and brother are 19 and soon to be 18. My mom already got them. geez.....what do you see for me?

Tired of Homes

Dear Tired of Homes:

I do see you returning to your birth mother soon. Your aunt believes that you are responsible for the death of her dog, and yes, dogs are considered by many people to be equal members of a family.

Time is the only thing that will help your aunt heal her sorrow over her pet and remember that you are a loving being that searches for a place to belong and a loving home. She became afraid that if someone could harm a pet then they are also capable of harming a person.

It is time for you to let go of what happened with the dog, it no longer serves your life in any constructive way. I don't, quite honestly, see what happened there clearly, but "feel" as though it was almost a "blackout" situation - a complete shut down of consciousness due to fear; fear that you would lose your home. Life, especially in the form of pets, is to be honored and respected as they are loyal to their owners and do not hold grudges, they are an example of pure love and devotion. I see the Job Corps in your future - probably one located near Missoula, Mont. You will, over time be able to locate all of your brothers and sisters. Your mother is also searching and she is very determined to reunite her family.

I am so sorry that you have had such a rough life and also proud that you are trying so hard to be a good person and a strong man. You have had a rough time, and that rough time can either make you wise with compassion for all other living beings or mean and corrupt. You can use your experience to stay away from drugs and alcohol (because you know what they do) or as an excuse to drink and do drugs and end up in prison. It would be to your benefit to find a strong spiritual path, either a good interpreter man (medicine man) or a good church that is not filled with judgment. I ask that everyone that reads this to pray for you, and I will pray for you too.

You have a good heart and with a little love and understanding from others and from yourself you can grow up and help other children that have it so rough.

God be with you. You deserve a good life.

Dear Anna,

I have a question for you. Will my son's operation actually happen? He sustained an injury back in November of 2005 we went from doctor to doctor everyone with a different diagnosis and a time frame for healing. Finally, in April the neurologist said: You have done damage to the nerves (he didn't mention the extent) and they will probably heal in a couple of years. I asked if there was the possibility of surgery he didn't feel it would be beneficial and it would be costly and he didn't think medicaid would pay for it.

The diagnosis of two years didn't sit well with me, my son cannot wait two years!! So I got on-line and found a nerve specialist whom I sent my sons records for evaluation to see if he was a likely candidate.

Sure enough the next day he e-mailed me back and said yes he is and mentioned a time frame for effectiveness of the surgery (within a year) Now I've contacted the right people to help finance the surgery as Indian Health Service won't help with a DIME but we are waiting approval. I have been stressed for a month and a half I've been working on the project. Please give us some insight as hopefully next week we will be reading your response as my son leaves for his surgery. God Bless You; and please pray for us as I know your prayers are powerful.

Worried mom

Dear Worried Mom:

Please don't waste any time to call and write your Senators and Congress people. Make a loud plea. If you need to, got to Pierre and speak on your son's behalf in front of the legislature.

Also, please try the Shriner's Hospital. They may not be the place that handles this sort of thing but they can help direct you to who can help. The plea that I want to make at this time goes out loudly to the BIA, Congress, the Senate, and IHS.

When the treaty agreement was made for health service for the Indian people, it did not say "less-than" the rest of the population receives with good health insurance. It did not exclude permanent disability operations because maybe one part of the body is less-valuable or one person is less-valuable than any other part or person.

A child deserves to be whole, to have a good life, to be healthy, pain free and be able to have a life equal to any other child's life. Lower quality of health care is not acceptable, and lower quality of equipment, physician specialists, and expertise is not acceptable either.

I know, because of practicality, that it is not possible for every kind of specialist to be found and employed by IHS, but referral services need to be afforded. Where is the conscience of our country's leaders?

Each child needs to be treated as though that child were a Senator's child, a Congressman's child, or even the President's child.

It is a small price to pay for invading a country, conquering the people, and stealing their land. It is the price of conscience.

Please understand that the only way things will change is if each concerned person takes the time to make a plea and allows their voice to be heard. The people of the United States need to demand that whatever money is dedicated to war - an equal amount should be pledged to the health of our sacred children. I do see your son having the operation, therefore a way will be found.

I also offer the services of my business partner and myself to do healing work with your son (for free).

Please email your phone number. Ceremony will, I also see, help your son heal. I have already prayed for your son, and will continue to do that, especially hard in an Inipi. Mitakuysin

OSLH is the Tribally Designated Housing Entity for the Oglala Sioux Tribe of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, located in South Dakota. OSLH manages approximately 392 Mutual Help and Occupancy Units and 1150 Low-Rent Units constructed under the Housing Act of 1937 ("37 Act") and 45 Lease Purchase Units constructed under the Indian Housing Block Grant program developed pursuant to the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act ("NAHASDA"). All subcontracts executed between the proposer and its subcontractors, if any, also are subject to those provisions and language requiring such compliance will be included in all subcontracts.

In addition to the SS7(b) and 3 compliance requirements, the successful proposer must comply and ensure subcontractor compliance with the Copeland Act Requirements(29 C.F.R.Part 3); 24 C.F.R. part 85 Certifications, including but not limited to mandatory standards and policies relating to energy efficiency contained in the state energy conversation plan issued in compliance with the energy Policy and Conservation Act (Pub.L. 94-163), and HUD requirements related to reporting patent rights, and/or copyrights and other rights to data; HUD procurement regulations; OSLH Procurement Policy; and all other applicable laws, rules and regulations.

Memorial Birthday Wishes
Happy 1st birthday in heaven to a special little boy, Baby Everette, it's been ayear since you left us, you were only a month old, but a lot of people loved you, I'll never forget the first time I saw you and held you in my arms, you were this tiny little guy with the biggest eyes I fell in love with you from that moment on. The day you left us was so sad, I'll never forget seeing you like that, you looked like a little angel sleeping, every day I think about you and when I get lonesome I go visit you at your grave. Today you would have been 1 year old, you would have been walking and talking, but God had other plans for you, now you are his special angel. Now you're in heaven at grandma's house, you will always be remembered and I will always love you and treasure the short time I had you in my life.
Happy B irthday Baby Everett
Love always,
Grandma AJ

Council votes in Janis as vice

Bans attack dogs from reservation

Attempt to terminate Chief Judge fails, hearing set for Friday

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Tuesday, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council used a two thirds vote to add the question of filling the vacant vice president's position to the agenda and just after the lunch break, voted 11-1 to fill the vacancy with Eileen Janis, the second highest vote getter for vice president in the 2004 tribal election.

"We are not leaving this position empty one more day," said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge Village, "We need a person here at the Red Cloud building on a day to day basis, Alex has been focusing a great deal on Bear Butte and is not always in the office."

Janis, a single parent with two boys, is a past tribal council representative from Pine Ridge and in the last administration served as assistant treasurer to Dave Rabbit. Janis was the top vote getter in the primary election in 2005 for vice president then lost to Alex White Plume in the general.

After impeaching Cecelia Fire Thunder as tribal president and moving White Plume into the presidency on June 29 in Porcupine, the council voted to leave the vice president's position vacant for the remainder of the term. During a special session of the tribal council on July 13 in Pine Ridge, the council passed a resolution to refer the decision on the vice president's position to the OST Supreme Court on an initiative from Lyle Jack, council rep from Pine Ridge.

During a flurry of motions that flooded the council floor in the council chambers in the Red Cloud building, Ruth Brown, council rep from Wanblee and Eagle Nest

Eileen Janis

District, demanded that the council terminate the services of Lisa Adams, the OST chief judge and black ball past chief judge and current private attorney, Robert Grey Eagle.

"At this time we do not have separation of powers and when the tribal council makes a decision as we did with the past tribal president then that's it, the chief judge and the tribal court have no business over ruling us or bringing us into court," said Brown; "we are tribal government and the council has the final say."

When Brown's motion finally hit the floor, no one could remember

Three couples celebrate 60 years

60th wedding anniversaries, getting more rare by the year

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Saturday, July 8 just outside of Pine Ridge Village, family and friends gathered to honor two couples who were celebrating their 60th wedding anniversary, Vincent and Alvina Brewer and Seth and Frieda Irving.

On June 17 George and Carol Drapeaux also celebrated their 60th anniversary.

"It was just awesome," said Frieda Brewer, Vincent and Alvin's daughter who was named after Frieda Irving, "All of the kids planned it out and coordinated the event, it was really special."

Frieda, Bryan, Joy, Vincent Jr., Harold and Allie worked with Jodene Smith, Seth and Frieda's daughter to put the special event together.

"It was all about family and in both families the focus was about the family not going out to the bar and partying, it was about doing things with each other and the children," said Frieda, "They went hunting and fishing together and with the children when they were old enough, canned and dried corn and we all went out as a family over the weekend. We went to the badlands and roasted hot dogs, they made it fun for everyone."

Vincent Brewer, 80, worked all of his life as a police officer and criminal investigator, ran the Honor Farm, was Housing director, and served as both associate and chief judge and retired while Alvina worked in the dormitory at Oglala Community school and retired after 30 years as the dorm manager.

"They were kind to each other, there was respect for one another," Frieda said, "Now don't get me wrong, they had their disagreements, I remember when mom got really mad and she said you take the boys and I'll take the girls you so and so - I made her mad when I said I wanted to go with my dad, but they always found a way to work it out because they were real-

RST says no to beer sales at fair

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - During the RST tribal council meeting on Thursday, July 20 and aired over KINI FM, the council addressed a number of issues related to the upcoming annual Rosebud Fair.

They turned down beer sales permit and heard the RST tribal president read a statement that a suit against BBC Entertainment that was ruled against the tribe earlier was reversed.

Representative Stephanie Herseth will apparently attend the fair as it is her election year, according to comments by RST president Rodney M. Bordeaux.

The rest of the congressional delegation has been invited as well as the Governor.

The tribal building had also been the object of a "bomb threat" as tribal employees could be seen waiting outdoors for a half hour while Rosebud Law Enforcement Services cleared the building.

The RST tribal council debated the merits of making alcohol sales legal. Rosebud community brought a resolution to approve beer sales at the annual Rosebud Fair. Antelope council representative Robert Moore went on record as being opposed to such alcohol sales. He noted that there are many elders and children walking around at the fair.

Marion Young-One Star said that approving alcohol sales would necessitate more security in the event the beer sales are allowed. Rosebud council representative Fern Bordeaux-Boltz said that the community wanted to present a resolution banning all 'dance permits' in the boundaries of Rosebud community. She cited several incidences of gang fights, and violence from dances that had gone on longer than approved.

Moore said "The law and order code says it is against the law for public consumption"

The motion to sell beer at the Rosebud Fair with ten percent going to Rosebud Community was presented and the roll call vote was 4 yes and 10 no and the motion was defeated.

Rosebud community member, Cliff Marshall, addressed the council. He said "Think before you speak…,I submitted our application and $1,800 will go to the tribe and the community can have 10 percent. The dances are not gang-related or knock down fights. I want you guys to reconsider so we can get our permit. We have our own security. No disrespect to the guy up behind us. I have been watching him for 15 years."

The tribal council apparently was facing deficit funding for the Rosebud Fair budget and were discussing ways in which to cut items previously added to the budget or discussed levying fees in order increase the budget, i.e. stock fees. They discussed removing the cost for committee member jackets. Council representative, Steve Denoyer of Okreek said "If you want to take out the jackets for those who do hard work then contract it out."

Denoyer said. "We turned in $16,000 to the tribe last year (ball tournament.) Nobody is looking at that. The revenue brought in. Take a look from last year, instead of cutting. We can guarantee we can bring in over $10,000. We can't pass a budget with a deficit as Ken LaDeaux said. No reason to be nitpicking about star quilts, light bulbs, it is

Additional Indigenous gold medal games winners

DENVER, COLO. - Austin Sanchez, 165 lbs in the juvenile class won gold in boxing for Team South Dakota as listed in their official website www.naig.com.

According to Annie Ferguson, her son James Dean Ferguson, 145 lbs in the men's class also won gold and was featured in the Denver Post. James' mother and aunt had made him a warm up robe with the name "Destroyer" and it apparently was unique as he was the only boxer to wear a robe.

Team South Dakota finished with ten medals in boxing and a total of 39 medals overall at last count, unofficially.

who had seconded it and no one volunteered to provide a second until Ruth's colleague from Eagle Nest district, Tom Poor Bear, made the second. Citing Section 19, political interference in the court, Craig Dillon, council rep from LaCreek, led a delegation off the floor of the council refusing to participate in the discussion or vote. When the vote was finally run, Brown's motion failed, two in favor and eleven against.

Although tensions ran high during a good portion of the council meeting, emotions of every council representative in the room were tugged at as young Braedon Rodriguez and his mother Em Fills the Pipe presented a proposed Braedon's Law for consideration by the tribal council.

"Three years ago, my son was five years old and was driving a four wheeler in a field north of Sharp's Corner, the vehicle ran out of gas and a short while later, a pregnant female pit bull pulled Braedon off the four wheeler and started to maul him; a short time later, a male pit bull joined in and started to maul my son," said Fills The Pipe; "by the time the dogs were pulled off my son, he was ripped and bleeding from his head, shoulders and back and it took more than 200 stitches to close up the wounds and several surgeries over the last three years to repair the damage. Nothing ever happened to the dogs or to the owners and Braedon is here today to support legislation to protect children and adults from dog attacks in the future."

After an emotional discussion, the council voted unanimously, 14-0 to ban pit bulls, Rottweilers and Doberman pinschers from Pine Ridge reservation and provided criminal penalties for those who own dogs who bite, attempt to bite or attack individuals. The law goes into effect in 30 days giving current dog owners time to comply with the new legislation.

Michael Fairbanks, a member of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa and a past BIA superintendent on Pine Ridge from 1985-1991, addressed the council and stated that he would be willing to come out of retirement to return to Pine Ridge as a BIA superintendent. The council voted 15-0 with two not voting to request the BIA to support this action.

The council vote 14-0 to accept the resignation of Jane Colhoff as juvenile judge and temporarily appoint Sydney Witt to take her place and 14-0 to advertise the position for 30 days. By a vote of 11-3, the council amended the charter of Lakota Oyate Wakanyeja Owicakiyapi from a four year duration to a perpetual duration.

ly all about the family. That was the bottom line."

Three couples within weeks of celebrating their 60th anniversaries, that is something, it is going to get more and more rare for that to happen, added Frieda.

"People have lost respect, there is just pure no respect today," said Brewer, "No respect for themselves and for others and I don't know if parents revere their children today as my parents did raising all of us."

Another thing, it seemed that my dad and uncle Seth seemed to enjoy it so much, they couldn't quit talking about it and sharing it with their family and friends, it was just so awesome, concluded Frieda Brewer, a very proud adult child of parents married for 60 years.

George and Carol Drapeaux of Martin celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary on June 17 at the Fort Randall Casino with an open house with family and friends. They were married on March 29, 1946.

The live in Martin and are originally from the Yankton Reservation and have five boys and two girls. Their children are George Jr. from Yankton, Roger from Alaska, Danny from Iowa, Brian from Pierre and Jason from Martin. Their daughters are Monica Drapeaux-Misher of Maryland and Suzanne Blue Star Boy of Washington, D.C. They have 16 grandchildren and 9 great grandchildren.

They have lived in Martin for 16 years.

absurd. We need to look at what we have before we start cutting."

After discussion was completed on the fair budget, there was a motion to re-consider and amend RST resolution 05-254. The fair budget resolution was approved with 12 for and 0 opposed. The budget was approved and set for the 2006 RST Fair and Rodeo.

St. Francis council representative Patsy Valandra made a second motion that would have given the RST Fair Board and Special Events, if approved, a permit to conduct beer sales and the tribe would retain all profits. The motion was seconded by James Henry and questioned by Mike Crow Eagle. The motion was defeated by a margin of 9 no votes and 4 yes votes.

Denoyer said, "It's been a long time since a fatality at the fair. If that happens we are going to catch it here. We don't need to add fuel to the fire."

RST president Bordeaux then read a statement, "RST won a reversal against BBC Entertainment. It was filed against BBC Entertainment which is owned by Charles Colombe. The $415,000 that was paid to BBC in 1999 from casino funds. In a trial in RST court B.J. Jones ruled against the tribe. He said the tribe was not entitled.

The tribe appealed to the tribal Supreme Court and in an order and opinion dated July 26 the tribal Supreme Court reversed and vacated Jones ruling and remanded the case back to tribal court. The tribe was represented by RST Attorney General, Dana Hanna and attorney Judith Shapiro of Washington, D.C."

S.D. Divas take second in Phoenix

PHOENIX - Keisha Brewer, Lacy Weston, Christian Janis and Marque Lunderman wrapped up the midget girls championship and grabbed the gold medal in the North American Indigenous Games on Friday in Denver and on Saturday they left for Phoenix where they led the South Dakota Basketball Divas to the championship game of the Native American Basketball Invitational at the U.S. Airways Arena where they lost to the Northern Navajo Lady Cats 53-51 on a buzzer beating shot.

With little time to rest, the Divas opened pool play on Monday with a 64-50 win over the New Mexico Lady Chiefs, added an 84-53 win over the Arizona Lady Wildcats and finished pool play undefeated with a 62-53 win over Salt River. Sadie In the Woods and Robyn Webber played for the Team South Dakota juvenile girl's team and along with Sophia Janis rounded out the Divas lineup.

Out of 31 girls teams entered the top 16 entered the single elimination tournament on Thursday. The SD Basketball Divas ended up with the number six seed and faced Comanche Nation out of Oklahoma in the first game. Down 38-22 at the half, the Divas stormed back to win it 69-64 with Keisha Brewer knocking down 21 points, Lacey Weston added 14, Sadie In the Woods helped with 12.

"This tournament was just awesome, the girls really did well," said Monica Weston, Lacey's mother and half of the coaching team with Will Good Eagle, "We had some easy games in the pool play but in the tournament, they were all tough."

In the quarterfinals in the arena, the Divas clobbered the Rez Girls 84-59 with Brewer leading the way with 25 points, Sadie chipped in 21, Webber added 14 and Weston helped with 12. It was the Lady Eagles in the semis and the Divas proved too strong on the front line as they won the right to play in the championship game 58-46. Weston was the high scorer with 17 points, Brewer tossed in 16 and In the Woods added 10.

In the championship game, the Divas were up at the half over the Lady Cats 32-28 in a game that saw the lead go back and forth throughout the entire game. Down by two with 16 seconds left in the game, Sadie was fouled and calmly went to the line and sank both shots to tie the game at 51 all. After two blocks by In the Woods, Good Eagle felt it was going into overtime but Talisha Joe came off of a double screen on top and as she was falling down put up a last second shot that gave the Lady Cats the championship.

"We struggled holding Joe down the first half as she scored 13 but in the second half we played a box and one and put our youngest player on her, Christian Janis and she held her to four points," said Good Eagle, "the game could have gone either way, the girls played great and next to LNI, it was the best tournament I've ever been in."

Weston finished with 18 points, Brewer added 16 and Webber helped with nine. In The Woods and Brewer were named to the all tourney team.

"When the championship game started, the Lady Cats had a lot of fans and we probably had about eight fans," said Monica Weston, "by the end of the game many of the fans had started cheering for us and Diana Taurasi, an all star from the Phoenix Mercury, was cheering for us and really enjoyed the play of Sadie and her shot blocking impact. At first the girls were getting nervous but Sadie calmed them down and told everyone it was just like playing in the Lakota Nation in Rapid City at the civic center."

Brewer and Weston arrived in Australia on Tuesday this week and will be participating in the Down Under Bowl basketball tourney, Brewer will be a junior at Pine Ridge this year and Weston will be a sophomore. Webber will be a senior and Sophia Janis will be a sophomore while Christian will be a freshman, all at Pine Ridge. Sadie In The Woods will be a freshman at Duke University this fall and Lunderman is set for her sophomore year at Red Cloud.

$8 billion settlement appears close on Indian trust lawsuit

WASHINGTON, DC - American Indians suing the government over billions of dollars in lost royalties say they are contemplating an offer by members of Congress to resolve their lawsuit for $8 billion.

The offer is considerably lower than the $27.5 billion plaintiffs offered to settle for a year ago. But plaintiffs say they are considering it seriously, bringing them closer than ever to ending the lawsuit, which has bogged down the Interior and Justice departments for 10 years.

``Eight billion dollars is something I wish was higher, but I'm glad they were able to bring something forward that was equitable,'' the lead plaintiff, Blackfeet Indian Elouise Cobell, said in an interview. ``Can we ever get near the total fair amount that should be given to individual Indians? I don't think so. I think individual Indian account holders would support $8 billion.''

Cobell filed the class-action lawsuit in 1996, accusing the government of mishandling more than $100 billion in oil, gas, timber, grazing and other royalties from Indians' lands dating back to 1887.

In what has become a messy, protracted court battle, the plaintiffs have won a series of district court victories. U.S. District Judge Royce Lamberth held interior secretaries Bruce Babbitt and Gale Norton in contempt and ordered the Interior Department to disconnect its computers from the Internet to secure Indian trust data.

But the plaintiffs were dealt a blow earlier this month when the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit ordered Lamberth removed from the case, saying he had lost his objectivity.

Plaintiffs offered a settlement package last year, and Senate Indian Affairs Committee Chairman John McCain, R-Ariz., and House Resources Committee Chairman Richard Pombo, R-Calif., have introduced bills that would resolve the case.

But the settlement amount has been a sticking point.

Cobell and one of her attorneys, Keith Harper, said Monday that officials for the two committees suggested the $8 billion figure almost three weeks ago.

Spokespeople for McCain and Pombo said they could not comment on the settlement and that committee meetings to work out the details would be held in the next two months.

Interior Department spokesman Shane Wolfe said department officials are continuing to work with the plaintiffs, but he also declined to talk about specifics.

Cobell said the Indian plaintiffs want to settle and move on.

``A settlement is a way of moving forward to get justice to the many Indian account holders who are elderly and in need of justice,'' Cobell said Monday.

Living in a drive thru era of relationships

This week, we focus on three couples that spent that spent 60 years together, that is more than 180 years of experience in relationship. How rare of an occurrence is that today and how rare will it be for us to see it in the future.

We congratulate the three couples as they celebrate that milestone. The couples are Vincent and Alvina Brewer, Seth and Frieda Irving and George and Carol Drapeaux.

We seem to live in a McDonald's Drive thru era of relationships, at the first time of trouble in a relationship, we split, we do not seem to be able to sit down and work things out. Why don't we invest in relationships anymore and what impact does that have on our children today and our overall society. How many children are being raised without a father?, How many without a mother? And what impact does that have on the children nd our overall society?

Lakota society is like many other collective communities across our global village.

There are desirable qualities and characteristics which we all wished we could emulate. We all know Lakota couples who have managed to stay together for decades and wished we had the wisdom to know what that magic something is.

For certain, we know that as the foundation of family and Lakota society, such couples have endured because they worked very hard.

Somewhere in their lifetime they also witnessed the good role modeling that someone else demonstrated to them as an example of longevity and integrity in a relationship.

Some couples say they never go to bed angry or that there are no secrets held between them. Whatever the ingredients that create that certain magic, the lessons that we learned from that are no longer being retained by contemporary society.

Young Lakota people appear to spiral through this 'drive through' type of mentality when it comes to creating a solid foundation for family. "Drive through' meaning that in our 'throw away' society everything is disposable and that same notion extends to marriage and long lasting relationships. Relationship counseling and therapy has surely progressed over the last 40 years and gotten more sophisticated in its approach, however, the availability of such services are limited on the reservation.

What if such counseling needs had the same weight and emphasis as drug and alcohol counseling?

If agencies were to view relationship and family therapy equally as important, the tawahi would have a greater chance to succeed and it would be a signal to our younger Lakota that they, indeed, should be the foundation of the contemporary societal demands that are now confronting Lakota life.

Too many times, people find themselves unable to reconcile with those they were attempting to build a foundation with and this in turn might lead to new families with new moms and dads. Such families are now called 'blended families' and sometimes called wojapi present a new challenge for all involved.

There is a severe need for strong, traditional family structures for our children to feel secure and wanted.

Things to empower yourself

Are you a taker or a giver?

By Patty Pourier

There is an old board game called "LIFE." Many of you may have played it. The objective of the game is to get the most you can. Relationships are really nothing in the game, except to get what you can out of them. The one with the most toys wins. The game is based on self-ishness and self-reliance. It's all about "ME" mentality. It's about MY money. It's about what I can get for MY family. It is a game called life that is about ME, ME, ME.

There is no sacrifice for others in this game. There can be words of kindness, but they are never followed through with action. In other words, like in real life, it really isn't the thought that counts, but the action that follows the thought that really counts.

Selfish thoughts behind actions to get what you want is called manipulation. Do you sit and think about "if I act out this, or if I do that, then they will do _____or feel that way and I will get I want. This is manipulation of others to get your own selfish desires. It's the all about me mentality. Some of us even set it up - using a series of actions to set up a manipulation "play" to get what we want. In the game of manipulation it appears we sacrifice nothing. But this in not true.

We sacrifice a lot to get what we want. We sacrifice the love of a brother or sister to get or to try to manipulate to get what we want. When what you want has to focus on others and others actions, this is manipulation to receive what you want. It can be big or little.

Seeing others try manipulation after manipulation to get what they want, at any cost is prevalent today on a huge basis. Sometimes we have done things in the past we wish we wouldn't have, and the outcome of those actions resulted in something we don't like. Then in the game of life we have a choice, to repent, admit our wrongs, and accept the consequences of the bad behavior, or set up manipulation to get what you want. Again, "it's all about ME."

Have you ever noticed the person with a guilty conscience or selfish motives, always tries to focus on the other persons behavior, rather than their own. This is the first sign of manipulation with guilt.

Honest relationship with equal desire for the well being of all involved- not just themselves or their immediate family, their district, their tribe, their race or their country, is in short supply today. Few stop to think of the bigger picture. That when they manipulate to get what they want, they are really taking the freedom of another to do what they have the right to do.

Being a long term loving, unselfish, not manipulative friend or brother, is a reward above all monetary rewards you could have. They are relationships that last that are more precious than gold.

It really is not the thought that counts. It is the action behind the thought that counts. For instance, a cowboy comes home from roping and says, "Honey I thought about bringing you home a bouquet of flowers today." She responds with pleasantries. The next week same thing…cowboy goes roping…comes home…says he thought about bringing home flowers to his wife…third week same thing. The fourth week, same thing----the thought of bringing home flowers isn't going to go far, the action of bringing home flowers is probably the ONLY thing that what will count at this point.

Giving and accepting of another's heart is rewarding. That is EQUALLY giving and taking. Not about "what can I get out of this?" that is the thought of an unhealthy thinker. Giving and taking, allowing others freedom to make choices they have the right to make without trying to manipulate the outcome, is healthy thinking. Thinking about other people, giving to other people. Life that is not about ME, ME, ME and what I WANT is healthy thinking.

Self-reliance, the thought of not needing anyone, I am the end all and be all of all-not needing others is not a fulfilling life.

Life is not about getting all we can. We need to practice not being selfish and arrogant. It is hard to change. It is not fun. It is a sacrifice. It is self-sacrifice. It does not come naturally to most people.

Start to practice and think thoughts of humility, love, and gentleness. But just as mentioned above, it is not the thought that counts. These actions must be put into practice. And for most of us that is exactly what it will take, practice, practice, practice. Sitting down and playing a piece of music one time one a piano does not produce beautiful music. But given a mediocre pianist and enough practice, and a lovely piece of music can be played.

Beautiful people and relationships are not produced by one or two unselfish acts, but many over a period of time. Start by asking yourself; honestly, are you a taker or a giver? Do you think of yourself and your feelings before all others?

As odd as this may sound, the hardest people to be selfless with are our families and those closest to us. Start with your school, your district government, your sun dance group, and then go on to your family.

Sacrifice and practice can start to make broken relationships heal. Manipulation can break strong people. It's your choice. Choose to win at YOUR "Game of Life".

Totally disgusted at adult males for living with parents

Dear Editor:

I'm totally disgusted with the adult male population on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Whatever happened to Native American adult male values, his ethical standards, and his pride?

How could a so called Native man, his old lady and kids live off AFDC welfare monthly checks or even B.I.A. Grant, and to boot still live with this man's parents, this is embarrassing, to be in your 20s, 30s and 40s and still live with your parents.

I know individuals in the Porcupine District in Porcupine, S.D. who have college degrees and yet still live with their parents. Grow up!!.

I've had relatives of mine who lived off the Rez and had a great paying job, made really good money, weekly.

After a month or two, guess what?

They quit their jobs, packed up their belongings and went back to the rez because they were homesick and they thought everybody missed them, what a joke.

In my own opinion, every Native American individual has the potential to become what they want to become, everything is possible, and there is nothing that's impossible.

Take me for an example; I left my mom's house when I was 18 years old and never looked back. Since that time I've been honorable discharged from the United States Army, graduated from Southwest Indian Polytechnic institute in Albuquerque, N.M. in restaurant management.

Just recently on April 16, 2004. I graduated from Southeast Technical Institute in Sioux Falls, in heavy equipment operation. At the present time, I work here full time (60 hrs a week) as a heavy equipment operator here in Sturgis, I'm so glad that my mother (Porcupine District) taught me to look at the world with a positive attitude because if she didn't I'd be just like you, still living with your parents.

Today, I am very proud of my mother, a retired school teacher and single parent who raised eight children by herself, I know she sacrificed everything for us, she taught us that working for ourselves and out families should be very important to us.

We Native American have the potential to become the best we can be, so let's get with it people.

One should get out there in the world in the world and do something positive if not for yourself then do it for your kids, because they deserve the very best that you can provide for them, think about it.

Commenting on Giago's column

Dear Editor:

In reference to the article in Native American Times on Christianity. I read Tim Giago's column with a lot of attention. I live in Europe (Switzerland) and over here the opinion on America's action in Iraq is very different then the one in the USA. I am so amazed to hear that some Native people can talk about crusaders and such things like this. Christianity has destroyed the European original culture and then, spread everywhere in Africa, Asia and Americas and caused many troubles, destroyed many culture and still continue so. America is not a country of so called peace teachings of the Christ if you believe in them. America is a country of war and shame. How can this woman talk like this about a country where the first writings were made more than 6,000 years ago. Iraq is an old country with history older than Christianity and which teachings inspired most of the rules of the Bible. I just wanted to tell Giago that I support his opinion and that we have to remember what Christianity has brought to the First Nations in America and what it still continue to bring in terms of Human Rights, acceptation of the difference and respect of other's culture.

Slowowa keyas owakahnige sni
I know, but I don't understand

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

My son's aunt, Sandra Black Bear-White, comes from the highly regarded late Ben Black Bear, Sr. tiospaye and I had the honor of listening to her at the sun dance last week at leksi Roy Stone's. She told the people that there are traditional Lakota songs for the inipi, wiwang wacipi, and the uwipi and even the lowanpi. She made the point that each ceremony used to have its own set of songs, but now days the singers sing many of the same songs no matter what the setting and do not differentiate.

There is a "language gap" that is beginning to show itself and I will explain. There are many young singers who are doing a very admirable job of singing in Lakota, but it seems like some may have learned the proper pronunciation of the words, without understanding what they mean. They learn the songs by ear and don't really have the understanding of the words. That is not an easy task either, as it takes a bit of memorization ability to even learn to sing a traditional Lakota song. My friend, Harold Charging Hawk, is fluent but swears he cannot understand what is being sung in Lakota.

I used to sing powwow songs, but never was able to sing traditional songs because I didn't make a very strong effort to learn and so I can attest to the fact that it is no easy task.

As an educator and someone who studies Lakota very intensely, it took me a long time to learn basic Lakota and now I study more advanced Lakota words. It is a very beautiful and complex language that is quite descriptive. English isn't nearly as descriptive. One Lakota word can be broken down into 3-4 syllables and each will have meaning. A good example of that is the word iyomakisice which is "I am sad." Iyo refers being in a state of feeling something, maki refers to the self, and sice refers to the poor feelings. Another example is one which comes from Albert White Hat, Sr. and it is omahlecahe which is "I am really angry." Oma refers to I am really, hleca means basically 'torn up' and he refers to the condition that is.

That kind of word study and actually having to write down words and see their accompanying meaning takes a lot of time and effort even if one learns Lakota growing up. It is an exercise that high schools and colleges have to do in order to properly learn and retain the language. I am aware that much of that is done by the staff at SGU as Duane Hollow Horn Bear, Albert White Hat, Russell Eagle Bear and Francis Cutt and the rest of the staff are very good instructors.

Whether we are teaching Lakota in the elementary school or at home, or even to young singers, we have a responsibility to do the nitty-gritty work and demonstrate how Lakota can be broken down into its component parts. It's not an easy task as the young people have a lot of competing interests that seem to interfere. I know that because my own son is interested in fire science, so he would be interested in anything that had to do with fire in Lakota. Words like peta- fire, oceti-camp fire, kata-hot, usni-extinguish, sota-smoke, gu-burnt, or even oile-it is burning.

*Excerpt taken from Albert White Hat's book "Reading and Writing the Lakota Language."

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Thoughts that come from the heart

How youth deal with the pain of loss

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Recently I had an experience that gave me some thought of dealing with loss. I live near an asphalt highway on a gravel road and really don't care for the speed of the traffic flow on the highway. Vehicles come out of the town and have a tendency to pick up speed. I worry about kids walking on the road and getting hurt and also the animals.

My youngest daughter Vanessa, 20, is a cat lover and since she was a little girl, she has always had to have a cat. We have owned so many cats, from the names Midnight to Doujah to Stash.

The cats that have come in and out of her life have gone well past their nine lives. I doubt she can even remember the cats she has had in her life. The latest cat she has in her life is a beautiful black and white fluffy cat. It was a gift from her cousin, who paid near the sum of 300 bucks for it.

His name is Stash, actually his full name is Johnny Cash, the man in black, and he was probably named this because of the way he looks. I think that is why this cat grew on me. When I look at him I think of Cash and his song Ring of Fire which reminds me of my mother and my oldest brother Ron, who have both gone to the spirit world. It was one of their favorite songs.

I not only got attached to this cat because of his name but because he just seems a lot smarter than the rest of the cats that were in my daughter's life. Because of that, he added an entertainment value to my life. Actually, he listens to me when I talk to him and if I tell him to go outside he does it, without me having to actually physically boot him out. His favorite place to sleep is on the back of the love seat, he sleeps on the top like a cat doily, his body and his legs flatten and draped over the top. Every time I see him sleeping that way, I laugh.

Last week, we had a late night sweat and I gave one of the ladies a ride home and just as we got to the highway, there was a dead cat in the middle of road and my heart just sank when I realized it was Stash.

So there we were in the late of the night, me still in my sweat dress, scraping a dead cat off the highway, fitting him in a box, so he could have a proper burial the next day.

I commented to my friend about how many times my daughter went through this and each time it was an emotional hurt for my daughter because she gets attached to these creatures and when she would lose them she would feel the loss and in dealing with it, she would immediately want to replace them.

This time, I felt the loss and it wasn't a good feeling. Poor Stash, and I knew when I told my daughter she would be hurt and she would process it and soon there will be another. But this time, I felt so sad. I knew it was because I got too got attached to this cat. It just hurt me to see him dead on the road that way, I felt for Vanessa and I felt for the poor thing.

The next morning, I woke up and was drinking my coffee knowing I had to tell my daughter about Stash and thinking about her loss, her experience in her life with loss and realized how simple it seemed as she went from one cat life to another. I realized she experienced that so much, she learned how to deal with it and here I was, hurting for her and not wanting her to hurt, to feel that loss.

There were times we would be in Rapid City scouring the classifieds with a cell phone and she learned how to be a sales person in selling people that she had a good home to provide for their kitties or cats.

She learned not to let the wasicu families know that their kitty or beloved cat may be a mouser someday.

One time she wanted a black male kitty and we found one after a search. The owner lived in a trailer which we finally found in a big trailer court east of town.

He obviously was a cat man as he had them all over the place. He needed to get rid of some of the latest litter and so there was my baby girl finding just what she was looking for. It was a little, skinny black kitty, something she could baby and would soon be her companion. It didn't take her long to have the kitty healthy and active.

It was those experiences that made her strong in her ability to handle loss.

When I was an adolescent and the first time I lost my puppy, I vowed never to experience that again and never did have a personal pet again.

Grief is an emotion that can take its toll if you don't process it in a good way. We love our children and want the best for them and that means protecting them from getting hurt and feeling loss.

But in teaching our children, we need to teach them how to process grief so when it happens, they will have the strength and the wisdom to handle it in a good way.

I was pondering these thoughts about loss in life and hurting for my daughter and feeling sad about Stash, when I heard that distinctive meowing and opened the door and in he comes running. He was still alive and the cat we scraped from the road was a look-alike. I could have sworn that cat on the highway was our Stash.

This week there is a conference in Rapid City sponsored by the Aberdeen Area Tribal Chairmen's Health Board and the U.S. Public Health Service, "It takes a Whole Tribe … Preventing Suicide: Community Driven Strategies to Save Our Youth," and the article I read it from states that there is a high number of young people who have recently taken their lives, often after episodes of depression, drug and alcohol use, job and disruptions in home life. The bottom core of dealing with these issues is the feeling of loss, dealing with negative emotions and knowing how to process those emotions.

When we were young and if we had a good perspective of dealing with loss and negative emotions, we were able to handle those sort of hurdles in our life and be able to move forward in a positive way.

In being older, we have a lifetime of experiences and skills that we acquired in dealing with loss.

But our youth are still in those tender years, where sometimes they dont' have those skills or expriences to draw from... so when they face loss, they see that "hopelessness."

And where do those skills come from? Our tiwahe, our parents, our aunties and uncles and grandparents, our teachers, our mentors and those that help structure us as we develop in life.

So where are you at in your child's life? Where are you at in your nephew and nieces life?

Where are you at in your grandchildren's life?

Notes From Indian Country

Debunking the myth of Christianity

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER
TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

A letter from an angry reader from Oklahoma chastised me for attempting to explain why the Iraqi people hate America. She wrote, "Tim Giago should realize that America is a Christian nation. Jesus Christ appeared to Black Elk, not to the Muslims."

I wonder how many Indian nations consider themselves to be "Christian nations." The two most potent weapons brought to the Western Hemisphere by the European invaders were disease and the Church. While the diseases unknown to the indigenous population destroyed millions of lives, the Church destroyed cultures, religions, traditions, languages and customs. The early demise of the Indian people can be equally attributed to both.

The letter writer, an Indian woman, continued, "We as Americans are crusaders. We bring democracy to a dark and ignorant country." Is that what the "crusaders" brought to the Indian people? Native Americans did not become included in America's form of "democracy" until 1924, nearly 150 years after America's settlers signed the Declaration of Independence. The "independence" and "democracy" was for white Americans only. It was not until 1946 when Arizona and New Mexico finally ratified the Constitutional Amendment that made Native Americans United States citizens. For the first 30 years of his life, my father, born and raised on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, a fluent Lakota speaker, was not a citizen of the United States.

The settlers who came to America in pursuit of religious freedom outlawed most religious rites of the Indian people. The Sacred Sun Dance of the Great Plains Indians was banned and its practitioners subject to arrest and incarceration.

The Church created the myth that Jesus appeared to Black Elk in order to convince other Lakota that Black Elk had seen the light and had become a Christian in the end. His own family members dispute this outlandish claim. As a matter of fact, Black Elk faced prosecution for practicing the traditional spirituality of his ancestors. He had to perform some of the sacred rites of the Lakota in secret.

The revival of the traditional religious practices of the American Indians has grown stronger over the years and came out in the open after passage of the American Indian Freedom of Religion Act was passed in 1978. Can you imagine that "Freedom of Religion" was finally granted to the Indian people 202 years after the Declaration of Independence?

There are those Native Americans who have attempted to integrate their Christian roots and beliefs with Native spirituality. Can this happen? Would the practitioners of the ancient Indian religions allow this? I think not. First off, Christianity is foreign to the Native people of this Hemisphere. It was brought from across the sea by the invaders. For the most part Christianity is based on the teachings of a Jewish rabbi named Jesus.

Whereas, the traditional spirituality of the Native people has existed long before the settlers landed on these shores. One Wicasa Wakan (Holy Man) named Rick Two Dog, an Oglala Lakota, can trace his spiritual family and advisers back more than 500 years. That even pre-dates the coming of the Pilgrims with their overly righteous views of Christianity.

Let's face it. The early settlers found the religious practices of the Native people difficult to understand and distasteful and they dismissed them, with a wave of the hand and a prayer, as heretical. Since the Native people did not, according to the settlers, have a religion, they were therefore pagans that had to be converted.

For an Indian man or woman to say that Jesus Christ is their Savior and Lord is to deny thousands of years of the inherent spirituality and religious customs of their own people. And to believe that they can incorporate this foreign religious concept into their traditional beliefs is now being discarded by many Indians that have returned to their own traditional customs and beliefs. They see with eyes wide open what Christianity has done to their ancestors and to themselves and they reject it.

I would like to hear from the Indian nations and have them tell me how many of them consider themselves to be "Christian nations."

I have no bone to pick with Christians or their beliefs as long as they practice those beliefs without interfering with my own beliefs and with the beliefs of those who are not Christians. I attended an Indian mission boarding school where Christianity was crammed down my throat from the minute I awoke to the minute I went to sleep. It's not that this was bad enough, but to debunk and criticize the traditional beliefs of my ancestors in order to implant this new religion into my young mind was outrageous. If the Church cannot apologize for the atrocities committed against the Native people how can I be expected to forgive them and least of all participate in their religious hypocrisy.

The Founding Fathers of the Indian nations will not be found carved on Mount Rushmore. Instead their bones will be found in the dust of the land walked upon by they and their ancestors for thousands of years, long before the settlers came. And in the space of a short 500 years the newcomers have brought this continent to the brink of self-destruction.

America may well consider itself a Christian nation, but please do not willfully discard those of us who are not. We are also Americans and we are also citizens of our own nations.

WOUNDED KNEE - The first annual Wounded Knee Memorial Motorcycle Ride honoring the trail of Chief Big Foot will be held Aug. 1 and 2. The ride will begin in Fort Yates, N.D., traverse through sections of the Standing Rock Cheyenne River, and Pine Ridge Indian Reservations, and end at the Wounded Knee Massacre Site, Wounded Knee.

The purpose of the Wounded Knee Memorial Motorcycle Ride is to remember and honor the Lakota people who suffered and died in December of 1890. The organizers of the ride, Wakanyeja Tiospaye O'Tipi (children's Village, Inc.), feel it is important to educate and raise awareness of all people of the terrible tragedy that happened. By remembering the past and by paying respects, healing and unity can be achieved.

Opening ceremonies will be officiated by Ron His Horse Is Thunder and other spiritual leaders and dignitaries from the Standing Rock Reservation. Riders will have the option of arranging for their own lodging or by camping at the powwow grounds and will be officiated by dignitaries and spiritual leaders from the Cheyenne River Reservation. Computer services opens in Mission

MISSION - Ray Stewart officially opened the doors to the "Computer Lighthouse" on Main Street on April 3. He sells computers, provides technical assistance and contracts with a number of local businesses to do their information and technology support. Stewart says his 16 years working with the Department of the Navy and a two year course from Bell and Howell has prepared him for the challenges of being an entrepreneur. His number one objective is to provide 'service' to the area. What is even more unique is the fact that he will make house calls to service computers. Photo by Archie Beauvais.

RST council discusses concerns of Sicangu athletes at 2006 Indigenous Games

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The RST council returned during the afternoon session on Thursday, July 20 and spent a fair amount of time discussing concerns regarding Sicangu athletes who participated in the 2006 Indigenous Games held in Denver. The afternoon session was also carried live on KINI FM radio of St. Francis.

After hearing that some parents had called their council representatives to lodge their concerns and complaints while the games were in progress, the tribal council made a commitment to set aside a day to honor the Sicangu athletes and their coaches with a special day of recognition, while they listened to some of the concerns.

Some of the concerns that were brought forth while RST youth affairs director, Mike One Star, Sr., had the floor surrounded complaints that the athletes had crowded sleeping conditions and many only ate two meals a day. The fundraising that was conducted in preparation for the games was also the focus of some discussion. Each coach had conducted their own fundraising for the trip.

The need for accountability of the funds was something One Star, Sr. said he was very much in support of. He noted that he attempted to establish a line item for the Indigenous Games a couple of years ago, but it did not occur. RST treasurer James Wike said that it was important that any funds collected on behalf of the tribe needed such accountability. Antelope council representative, Jo Colombe, noted that the policy manual required the tribe to terminate those individuals who fundraised on behalf of the tribe and who did not administer the funds through the tribe's finance office.

Rosebud council representative, Ken LaDeaux said he was appreciative of the fact that fellow council representative, Steve DeNoyer, had traveled to Denver and had acted on behalf of RST in resolving some of the issues which had arisen. LaDeaux said that with respect to some of the concerns, it was difficult to defend some of the concerns without knowing all the facts. Denoyer said there was a need for better planning next time and that the tribe needed to do the coordination and fund the Sicangu athletes at the next games which will be held in Canada.

RST president Rodney M. Bordeaux encouraged the tribal council to begin planning for the next Indigenous Games in two years.

South Dakota: stigma should be removed to encourage assault reports

PIERRE (AP) - The social stigma needs to be removed from sexual assault so more victims will report crimes and law enforcement can arrest the offenders, Hughes County Sheriff Mike Leidholdt says.

Sexual assault and family violence have existed since time began, but the crimes always have been underreported, Leidholdt said. ``It's one of those deep, dark secrets. Sexual assault is one of those things as well. The more light you can shine on it, the less of a stigma it becomes,'' he said.

If the stigma can be overcome, more people will report it, Leidholdt told a legislative task force studying sexual assault in South Dakota.

The panel will gather information about such assaults, including treatment for victims, prevention efforts and law enforcement. The committee then will make recommendations to the governor and Legislature by Dec. 1.

Thirty-four percent of American Indian women will be raped during their lifetime, Charon Asetoyer, executive director of the Native American Women's Health Education Resource Center, told the committee.

Steve Feimer, director of the University of South Dakota's Government Research Bureau, told the committee Indians suffer three times more aggravated assault than the general population.

He also said domestic violence and sexual assault are hard to handle in rural areas, partly because of the isolation. Feimer said that plays into the abuser's ability to assert power and control over the victim.

``It's hard to get help'' because shelters and other resources are far away in rural areas, Feimer said. ``Women in many of these areas feel isolated. There's nowhere to go.''

Recent studies say anger management training is ineffective in dealing with abusers, he said. ``The batterer gets some sense of relief out of the battering, if that makes any sense,'' Feimer said.

Declaration of drought declared by Rosebud

Rosebud fire fighters honored

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - During its regularly scheduled July council session the Rosebud Sioux Tribe honored the Rosebud fire fighters in recognition of their efforts to fight area fires and keep the Rosebud reservation safe. An Executive Proclamation was issued by RST President, Rodney M. Bordeaux.

As if to highlight the importance of the work that fire fighters regularly engage in, both structural and wild land, Russell Eagle Bear of the RST Land and Natural Resources committee sponsored a resolution to declare Rosebud a drought area.

The Rosebud Sioux reservation was designated as a drought area during the afternoon session on July 20 with the motion as brought on Eagle Bear. RST resolution 2006-182 read, "The lack of rainfall and extreme heat has caused dry conditions which have resulted in extensive damage to pasture, hay lands, grazing conditions and crops. Therefore be it resolved that the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council hereby declares the Rosebud Sioux Indian reservation to be in state of disaster and emergency arising from the lack of rainfall and drought conditions."

Front row l-r, Joe Espinosa, Jim Meek, Gene Emery, Arnold Jordan, Bob Oliver and William Lafferty. The group was honored by the tribal council last week with an executive proclamation. The Rosebud Sioux reservation is in a state of drought and is designated as a disaster area and, as such, is eligible for aid from the state of South Dakota and FEMA. Also, the RST president was directed to contact federal and state authorities.

Robert Moore, District 3 Antelope council representative said, "The Rosebud Sioux Tribe is considered a local government and we have to be named in the declaration. The Governor has to work with the state to notify FEMA." Moore said he would work closely with the tribal administration in facilitating the proper transmission and disposition of the drought declaration as he had worked in the FEMA office in Denver, Colo. previously and is familiar with the process.

The motion was voted on and there were 14 in favor and 0 opposed with 4 council representatives not voting. "This Activates BIA Resources" said Eagle Bear.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I want to ask you something, as I always read your column every week in the newspaper. I have lost some money or misplaced it and I really feel bad, I am just sick over it, because I am having such a hard time. Hope you can help.

Feeling Terrible About This

Dear Feeling Terrible:

Your money is not going to be returned. It was not stolen, it was accidentally "taken" with a pile of stuff (clothing?) that was removed from your home.

When it is located it will not be associated with you enough for you to be notified. Please don't worry, things will work out. I see you borrowing some money and being given a little money by a friend.

I know how it feels. The only message is to be more careful and pay attention to what you do with your money.

Develop a pattern of handling it - i.e.: always put it in the same place (in my case I have a place I put it at work and a place I put it in the car and a place I put it at home, and best of all a place I put it in the bank).

Money eases up for you in September when a constant income begins.

Dear Anna,

I am a young Lakota man, who recently met a wonderful woman and we have a beautiful son and we now live in Alaska. What do you see for my future in three years?

Would I have my own business as I desire?

Wondering From Up North

Dear Wondering up North:

That seems to be the direction you are headed. I see a rather large metal building (quonset hut shape) and a sign on the road. I see BIG HUGE wrenches and bookkeeping. I also see horses out back.

It seems to me that the reason you are in Alaska is to be able to open your own business in the future. I see your relationship as thriving and another child (I see pregnancy in December). You are headed in the right direction. Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

Help! I just can't stop thinking about my exboyfriend! It's an every day thing, I just stop what I'm doing and wonder or think of how things were when we were together and if they would of been the same or any better. Then I find myself missing him and being lonely for him wondering if he feels the same about me.

We broke up long ago and I've went out with other guys but it seems like I always compare them with him. It bums me out because when I see him he looks happy and that makes me more sad. He moved on but I always wonder if he thinks about me the way I think of him?

Will I ever meet someone that is right for me and who likes me for who I am and how I look? Or will I continue thinking of him and wondering if we will ever get back together?

Sincerely Bummed Out

Dear Sincerely Bummed Out:

Well, what you think about is determined by you. You have a romantic version of that past relationship that would be hard for any real person to beat. You past boyfriend is happy and he has moved on.

He was a powerful lesson in your life not to be too much of a complainer or in other words a nag. When you were together you did not recognize what you had and continually searched for more from him than he could give. Understand there is a new man coming for you, who will love you and that you will love

He is coming in about seven or eight months. Please enjoy this new relationship and accept him for who he is rather than comparing him to the past - which is not who he is. That will create a situation where he also accepts you and loves you too. Life will not exclude you from the love you are waiting for.

Dear Anna,

I am a good Christian woman. I have a son who is 19-years old and he has made the decision to Sun Dance and carry a Pipe. I am alarmed and upset that he is deciding to return to the old ways and not honor the good Catholic life that he has been brought up in. What can I do to change his mind and save him from the dangerous so-called Red Road?

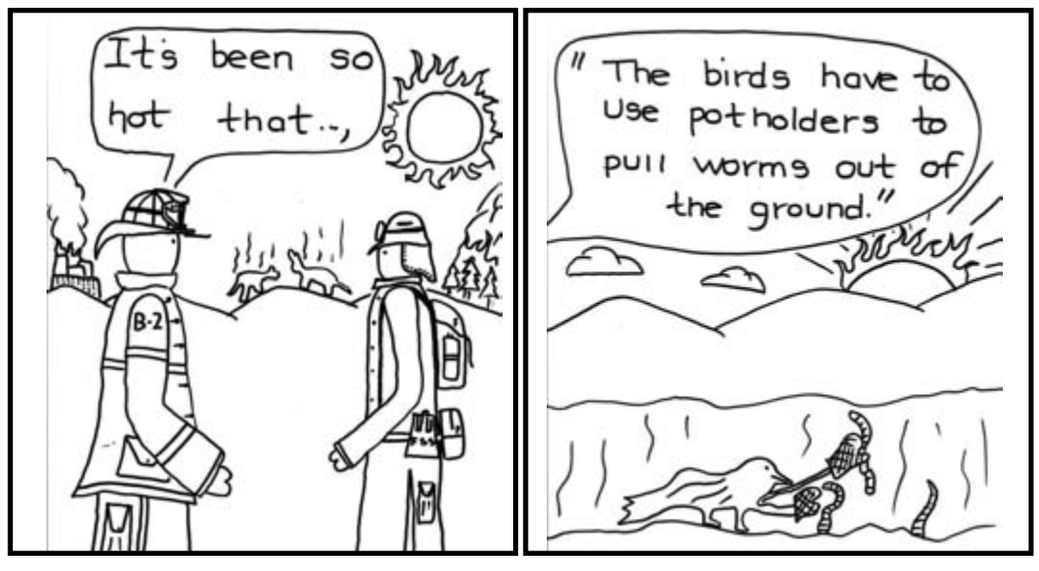
Concerned Mom

Dear Concerned Mom:

Nothing. You can and should do nothing. Religious freedom is a fundamental right of each human being - the right to pursue a relationship with the Creator is a very personal right.

Very interestingly, I know several people that carry a Pipe and Sun Dance that also consider themselves Catholic. The Red Road does not exclude Catholicism, it is Catholicism that tries to exclude the Red Road. Your son is a man of good heart and I hope you will find it in yours to honor and respect his choices, it will make the difference in whether he choses to remain close to you or closes the door and walks away from you.

Good luck in finding harmony in your heart with his decision.



You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests may be subject to publication.

Clearly mark Ask Anna on your request. This column is meant for entertainment purposes only.

Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing
Request for Proposals

Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing ("OSLH") is requesting a proposal for Attorney Services. Attorney will act as General Counsel for OSLH and will assist OSLH in meeting compliance requirements including but not limited to policy, ordinance, and occupancy agreement development, staff and Board training, development and review of contract documents, and other services as deemed necessary.

OSLH is the Tribally Designated Housing Entity for the Oglala Sioux Tribe of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, located in South Dakota. OSLH manages approximately 392 Mutual Help and Occupancy Units and 1150 Low-Rent Units constructed under the Housing Act of 1937 ("37 Act") and 45 Lease Purchase Units constructed under the Indian Housing Block Grant program developed pursuant to the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act ("NAHASDA"). OSLH operates under a budget in excess of nine million dollars per year.

The work to be performed under the proposal is on a project subject to section 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450e(b) and section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968. Section 7(b) required that to the greatest extent feasible (1) preference and opportunities for training and employment shall be given to Indian organization and Indian-owned Economic enterprises. All entities submitting proposals and claiming Indian Preference must include documentation satisfactory to show that they are Indian owned. Section 3 requires that to the greatest extent feasible opportunities for training and employment be given to lower income residents of the project area and contracts for work in connection with the project be awarded to business concerns that are located in, or owned in substantial part by persons residing in the areas of the project. All subcontracts executed between the proposer and its subcontractors, if any, also are subject to those provisions and language requiring such compliance will be included in all subcontracts.

In addition to the SS7(b) and 3 compliance requirements, the successful proposer must comply and ensure subcontractor compliance with the Copeland Act Requirements (29 C.F.R.Part 3); 24 C.F.R. part 85 Certifications, including but not limited to mandatory standards and policies relating to energy efficiency contained in the state energy conversation plan issued in compliance with the energy Policy and Conservation Act (Pub.L. 94-163), and HUD requirements related to reporting patent rights, and/or copyrights and other rights to data; HUD procurement regulations; OSLH Procurement Policy; and all other applicable laws, rules and regulations.

the selection of a qualified attorney will be based on the following evaluation criteria with established point rating for each category:

1. 20 points: Past successful performance and experience providing services to Indian Housing Authorities under the 37 Act and to TDHEs after the adoption of NAHASDA.

2. 20 points: Capacity and experience in providing policy and ordinance development. Interested firms must submit a sample procurement and personnel policy.

4. 10 points: Experience and professional qualifications of key personnel including specialized skills, project coordination, management skills, and experience in working together as a team.

5. 10 points: Specialized experience and technical competence (including fiscal capacity) of the firm. The firm and/or its attorneys should have had a minimum of fifteen (15) years experience with projects of this type. Volume and nature of present workload and availability of additional personnel and consultants to accelerate services required, if necessary.

6. 5 points: Indian Preference. Pursuant to S 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, 25 U.S.C. '450e(b), points shall be given for Indian ownership and participation, and/or evidence that a proposing firm is committed to the hiring of and does hire persons enrolled in federally recognized tribes, descendants of members of federally recognized tribes, or persons who are actively involved in the Indian community.

7. 5 points: Minority Preference. Pursuant to Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended, 12 U.S.C. ' 170lu, points shall be given to minority-owned firms, including women-owned firms, and firms that show evidence of commitment to hiring minorities and women.

8. 5 points: Cost, based on hourly rates.

9. 5 points: Because of fluctuating needs in Indian housing and demands for changes in NAHASDA, the firm must exhibit capacity to represent OSLH's interests in Washington D.C.

Inquiries related to submittal of proposals may be addressed to Ken Lone Elk, OSLH Executive Director at (605)867-5161.
